SCHLIEMANN'S LATEST.

HIS LATE DISCOVERY OF NOAH'S ARK.
The Interesting Remains of a Memorable Voyage.
Our old friend Dr. Schliemann is hard at work making discoveries, and the latest news from him is of unusual interest. He writes that he has discovered the city of Pergamos in the Hill of Hissarik. This is the hill which contains the ruins of Troy and of the five later cities which were built one on the top of the other, with the ruins of Troy at the bottom of the pile. This system of building one city above another appears to have been the custom of that part of Asia Minor with which Dr. Schliemann is concerned, and that he should have found Pergamos, as well as six distinct Troys, in the Hill of Hissarik need not surprise us. That hill is simply a mine of ancient cities, and in all probability Dr. Schliemann will find other cities there, as Myra, and Tyro and Sidon and any other desirable ancient city that the directors of the Berlin museum may order.
Important as this announcement of the discovery of the city of Pergamos is, it is interesting with still more interest as more extraordinary discovery which Dr. Schliemann has made in the same Hill of Hissarik. This is nothing less than the discovery of Noah's ark in what would be regarded by United States naval officers accustomed to our crack naval vessels, as an excellent state of repair. The importance of this discovery to Sunday school superintendents, scientific persons, and naval architects can hardly be overrated. Dr. Schliemann was led to look for the ark in the Troad by a careful study of Greek mythology. He perceived that the Greek story of Deucalion was only a variation of the story of the ark, and although it was not, in his opinion, a historical narrative, he was ready to accept the Deucalion myth as evidence to the true landing-place of the ark, just as he accepted the "Hittite" guidebook to Troy and the objects of interest therein. The close relation between "Hittite," the Greek name of Troy, and "Hittite," the Greek name of Deucalion, would be evident to any person not wilfully prejudiced against comparative philology, and this relation convinced Dr. Schliemann that he should look for the ark and other relics of the Noah Deucalion cruise on the site of the ancient city of Troy.

When Dr. Schliemann digs for any particular thing, whether it is a city, a tomb, or a set of jewelry, he is morally certain to find it. He dug for Noah's ark in the Hill of Hissarik, and he found it on the second day, not more than seventy feet below the surface. Later excavations have laid bare the entire ark, though, thanks to the great discovery protection in putting a board fence around it and in compelling his workmen to dig with their eyes blindfolded, no one except Dr. Schliemann and his wife has yet seen the ark.
In a recent and strictly private letter Dr. Schliemann writes that he has discovered his last great discovery. He found that the ark, although some twenty feet of her bow had been carried away, was of the precise dimensions given by the writer of Genesis, but that instead of having an immense three-story house on deck, with a big trap door in the roof, through which the animals and Noah and his family were dropped, it had only the usual wheel-house, chart-room, and smoking saloon on the spar deck, and access was had to the interior by the usual companionway and hatches. The wheel-house was on the bridge, and there were what Dr. Schliemann regards as indications that steam steering gear was used, but in this matter it is probable that the doctor's enthusiastic disposition has led him into error, since, in spite of the fact that bridges are never found nowadays except on board steamers, there is no reason to believe that the ark was ever propelled by steam, or that Noah was ever acquainted with steam, except in connection with the tea-kettle.
The saloon was placed amidships on the main deck, where there is the least noise and motion, and was beautifully fitted with revolving chairs, swinging lamps and all ancient improvements. The state-rooms, as well as the saloon, were staterooms, only such trunks being left in them as travelers usually discard and stowaways look upon with contempt. In one of the lockers of the steward's pantry was found, however, a complete set of ivory chips and several packs of cards of the well known Moss pattern and a floor of a stateroom was picked up a memorandum signed "Hittite," and setting forth that the signer owed some person whose name was not mentioned, "33 shekels, to be paid before taking a hand in the next game."
There were stalls for the animals on the main deck forward, and the two lower decks had evidently been devoted exclusively to animals. Notices—in the Hittite language, of course—were still posted in various places requesting persons not to disturb the animals while sleeping or to annoy them with canes or umbrellas. In the hold were scores of bins labeled "corn," "oats," "compressed hay," "Thorley's Food for Cattle," etc., which were evidently used to hold the food intended for the animals.
While the fact that the ark contained neither boilers nor engines suggests that she was not propelled by steam, the additional fact that no remains of masts or spars of any kind were found, compels us to believe that she simply drifted with the wind and sea. This is the more probable as her model was almost precisely like that of our men-of-war, and we can only explain her failure to come in collision with something or to drift prematurely ashore, as is the habit of our national ships, by the hypothesis that she was the only vessel navigating the seas during the flood, and that there was a sufficient depth of water for her all over the world.

Of the identity of the vessel discovered by Dr. Schliemann with the original ark there can be no doubt, inasmuch as the name Ark is still on her stern in raised gilt letters. There was also found entangled with a ringbolt on her starboard side, close to her "Pimssoll's mark," a rubber watch coat with Noah's name on the inside of the collar. Dr. Schliemann is naturally very proud of his discovery, and he is so much encouraged by it that he is seriously thinking of discovering the Garden with the remains of the original serpent, together with Adam's lawn-mower and other garden tools in the inexhaustible Hill of Hissarik.
Kissed by Victor Hugo.
Chicago Inter-Ocean Paris Letter.
Six of us Chicagoans went to see Victor Hugo last Sunday night. He receives every Sunday evening, and always has a dozen or more of his friends to dinner with him. We knew that the regulation way to do was to write to the poet's secretary, asking permission to come to pay our respects to the old gentleman. But we had neglected to do that, and some of us were on the point of leaving Paris as we wrote our names on a card with the magic word Chicago thereupon and wended our way to the Avenue Victor Hugo. We were shown into the family parlor, a pleasant room in cream and crimson, with tapestry-hung walls, a venetian chandelier, as odd old clock and a few choice bronzes here and there. Two visitors were waiting for dinner to finish, although it was already 9 o'clock. By-and-by the old poet and his friends came in. He is much more gentle-looking than his pictures represent him to be. There is a certain ruggedness, almost coarseness, apparent in all likenesses of him. This is not natural. The benign old face, with its crown of white hair, is singularly tender and lovely. The secretary presented us: "Americans who wished to salute the poet."

The gentlemen of our party shook hands, said and received a few pleasant words, and then our turn came.
Little Edith, a little maid of 8 years, held up her little hand.
"At her age she may have an embrace," said the secretary, and the old poet kissed her upon her forehead, giving her his blessing. Then a very much excited young girl standing by cried as she saw little Edith: "Oh, am I too large to be kissed by the poet?"
"Yes, yes, mademoiselle," cried the secretary; but the lovely old poet said: "No, no, dear child." Then he took the excited young girl in his arms and gave her two rapturous kisses. She was almost delighted, and said half crying: "I thank you a thousand times. I shall remember this honor forever."
And the poet said, with his hand on his heart: "No, no, it is I who must thank you, and it is I who shall not forget."

LIGHTNING'S LIVELY WORK.
How it Treated a Barn in Berks County and a House Near West Chester.
In Berks county yesterday, a storm which arose about 5 o'clock was accompanied by considerable lightning and heavy peals of thunder. The sky was covered with dark clouds which stood stationary for about an hour, when they moved in a northerly direction. It was thought the storm would strike Reading, but fortunately it did not. While the storm was raging the stable erected at the one mile from Merztown, on land owned by Charles Folk, about one mile from Merztown, was struck by lightning and entirely destroyed, together with all its contents. Twelve valuable horses in the stable at the time were killed or perished in the flames. The loss is estimated at $4,000. There is no insurance.
In West Chester, the residence of Mrs. General George A. McCall, was nearly gutted by lightning. The lightning struck a tree close to the house and from it entered the kitchen window, tearing the plastering from the ceiling and walls. It then passed into the parlor, where more damage was done to the walls, and a valuable oil painting was stripped off its frame, though the painting itself was unharmed. Nearly every window-pane in the house was knocked out. The tree was completely wrecked. Mrs. McCall and family were sitting upon the veranda at the time, but were uninjured, being only slightly shocked. The mansion house and stable were struck, but no damage was done further than the stunning of two persons and some horses.

"I Am General Logan's Daughter."
Boston Traveler's Washington Letter.
A few days ago Mrs. Paymaster Tucker, nee Logan, was in the members' gallery viewing the Senate proceedings, while directly in front of her sat two ladies, one evidently a Washingtonian and the other a stranger. The latter was taking out a card to make herself agreeable, and as Mrs. Tucker was about to sit down, said to her friend: "There, you see that large man sitting in the centre of the chamber, with the jet black hair and large moustache?" "Yes," "Well, that is General Logan, of Illinois. It isn't generally known, but he is half Indian." At this point Mrs. Tucker could contain herself no longer. So gently tapping the lady on the shoulder, she said: "Excuse me madam, but you are mistaken when you say that Senator Logan is half Indian." "Well, I guess I ought to know," warmly responded the stranger. "I have lived in Washington all my life, and the fact of his Indian blood has never been questioned before." "I think I ought to know something about the matter, too," quietly answered Mrs. Tucker: "I am General Logan's daughter." As Dundreary says: "The conversation is ended," and with a lot-go-my-hair look at Mrs. Tucker the stranger and her companion flounced out of the gallery.

A MURDERER'S SUICIDE.
A Condemned Man Provided with the Means of Death by His Wife.
Andrew Pfoutsch, of Carroll county, Md., who shot and killed Jacob Lockman, and was recently sentenced to death, has committed suicide. Since the burning of the jail at Westminster he has been confined in a cell at the almshouse. He has several times said he never would be hung and has, therefore, been closely watched. His cell was a small square room with a door opening into a corridor, and a grated window looking into a yard. In the middle of the floor was a strong iron ring to which insane people have been fastened and to which Pfoutsch was hobbled every night. In the floor near the wall, however, was a broken board which served as a hiding place for the razor with which he killed Lockman. On Sunday his wife brought him some clothing and talked to him in presence of a guard. Yesterday morning she came again to see him, and the guard on going to the cell to call Pfoutsch, found him lying on the floor with his eyes bandaged and his throat cut. A new and sharp razor fitted in a comb, was lying beside him, and a cork-cup was also found on him. An inquest was held, at which Mrs. Pfoutsch acknowledged that she gave him the knife at the time of the burning of the jail, but denied having furnished him with the razor.

Brown's Iron Bitters is one of the very few tonic medicines that are not composed mostly of alcohol or whisky, thus becoming a fruitful source of intemperance by promoting a desire for rum.

No Whisky!
Brown's Iron Bitters is guaranteed to be a non-intoxicating stimulant, and it will, in nearly every case, take the place of all liquor, and at the same time absolutely kill the desire for whisky and other intoxicating beverages.
REV. G. W. BROWN, editor of the American Christian Review, says of Brown's Iron Bitters:
Gentle.—The Jewish writing of vital force in business, pleasure, and vicious indulgence of our people, makes your preparation a necessity; and if applied, will save hundreds who resort to an intoxicating beverage.
Brown's Iron Bitters has been thoroughly tested for dyspepsia, indigestion, biliousness, weakness, debility, overwork, rheumatism, neuralgia, consumption, liver complaints, kidney troubles, &c., and it never fails to render speedy and permanent relief.
