Gwendolen's Faith.

Cnicago Tribune. "Can you not answer me, Gwendolen?" Up from the meadows the soft breezes of a perfect June evening were wasting the faint perfume of the cowslip and a dead horse, and as George W. Simpson and Gwendolen Mehaffy stood near the gate whose decrepit appearance told with more eloquence than could mere words of the deathless passion that enslaved their souls, both felt that a crisis in their lives had arrived-a moment had come which would in the misty future that stretched away before them, like one of William M Evarts' letters, be either a bright beacon of hope and joy to look back upon with gladness, or a desolate landmark like the lightning-riven trees that one never beholds without a feeling of sadness. Secure in the consciousness of his own merit-that sterling merit which always lies in a strong arm, clear brain, and large feet-and yet with a modest diffidence concerning his own worth, the young man stood there in the gloaming with a half reluctant cat-on-the-back-fence expression that lent an added beauty to his pure young face, and made more plead-ingly tender the earnest, father-is-coming up-the-front steps look with which he regarded the beautiful girl who stood by his side. He had asked her to be his wife-to leave parents, sisters, brothers, and all the endearing influence of a happy, Christian home where two girls are kept, and go out with him into the wide world as a helpmeet and companion. He had told in fervid sentences of the great love he bore her-a love that would ever be the guiding star of his life, he said, cheering him waen the black clouds of adversity and despair hung heavily in the horizon of his hope, and without which his whole existence would be one arid trackless waste on which lay the whited skeletons of ambition and hope—ghastly remnants of a life whose final wreck was all the more sad because of the happiness which i might have held had love not flown with mocking laugh when pleaded with so

[When it came to ornamental lying, with two rows of fluting up the back, George took first money.] Gwendolen had stood in graceful poise as he spoke, one ear thrown slightly forward, and her right foot covering the door mat, and, now that he had finished, was looking down in maiden shyness while the rosy blushes that chased each other under the dazzling complexion would have told, if anybody could have seen them, of the emotions that were agitating her young soul. But no words came from her lips, those rosy ripe portals that opened with such languid grace when there was pie in the house-and George began to fear that perhaps he had talked her to sleep. Presently, however, she drew quite close to him, put her hand in his, and, resting her cheek upon his shoulder, she said : "Yes, George, I will marry you." "But when?" ask the young man, a horrible fear that his bluff was to be called, chilling his very blood. "I will marry you," repeated Gwendolen, "when a bicycle rider is elected Turning away to hide his emotion, George muttered in low, piratical tones :

How to GET Sick.—Expose yourself day and night, eat too much without exercise work too hard without rest, doctor all the time, take all strums advertised, and then you How to GET WELL.-Which is answered in three words-Take Hop Bitters!
