WHAT MY LUVER BAID.

BY HORACE GREELBY, IN 1842. By the merest chance, in the twilight gloon In the orchard path he met me-In the tall, wet grass, with its faint perfume And I tried to pass and he made no room; Oh, I tried, but he would not let me. So I stood and blushed till the grass grew

With my face bent down above it, While he took my hand, as he whisp'ring (How the clover litted each pink, sweet i

To listen to all that my lover said! Oh! the clover in bleom-I love it!) In the high, wet grais went the path to hide And the low, wet leaves hung over; But I could not pass upon either side

For I found myself when I vainly tried In the arms of my steadfast lover," And he held me there, and he raised my hear While he closed the path before me: And he looked down into my eyes and said-(How the leaves bent down from the boughs o'er head To listen to all that my lover said! Oh! the leaves hanging lowly o'er me!)

Had he moved aside a little way I could surely then have passed him; And would not have heard what he had to say Could I only aside have cast him. It was almost dark, and the moments sped, And the searching night-wind found us;

But he drew me nearer and softly said-(How the pure, sweet wind grew still instead To listen to all that my lover said! Oh! the whispering wind around us!)

I am sure he knew, when he held me fast, That I must be all unwilling; For I tried to go, and I would have passed. As the night was coming with its dew at last And the sky with stars was filling;

And he made me hear his story, And his soul came out from his lips and said-(How the stars crept out where the white

And I'm sure the wind-precious rover-Will carry his secret so sately and well, And that no being will ever discover One word of the many that rapidly fell From the eager lips of my lover, Shall never reveal what a fairy-like spell swell As they fell from the lips of my lover.

---Editing a Newspaper. Boston Post. There is one editor who has achieved the feat of running a newspaper to suit everybody. Occasionally, to be sure, he has complaints, but he never fails to satisfy the complainers that they are in the wrong. It wasn't always so with him. He only adopted the system after he got desperate. It was one day after he had A man came in and said: "Why in tophet didn't you print the whole of the cratic rules."

Jly14-tp tion of Cruelty to Hogs, instead of a brief abstract?" The editor replied : "Oh, you made a speech that wasn't in the re-port, eh?" Then he went around the counter. The dust flew for a few moments, and then it became more quiet The editor relaxed his grip on the man's throat sufficiently to let him speak, and he said that he guessed the article was all right, and he had only come in to renew his subscription. He was let up, paid the money and left, and as he went out he collided with a man who had an ugly glare in his eyes, and dancing up to the editor, said: "What d'ye mean sir; I pay for a sensible newspaper, and here I got a lot of stuff about cruelty to hogs. You ought to be put in jail for printing such rot.' The cditor went around the counter again and again the dust flew, and cries of "Take your teeth from my car!" "Let go o' my hair !" etc., were heard. It was full five minutes before the editor could get the man's coat torn off and put him on the floor with his head in the coal scuttle. But he did it at last. Then he jumped high in the air and sat down upon the man's stomach, and the yell the man gave, echoing in the coal scuttle, seunded awful. The editor was about to repeat the operations, but the man said: "We needn't prolong this agony. Your paper is the best in the world. It is all right. I'll take it for ten years in advance." Eight more visitors had the same experience. Then came one that the editor couldn't tharsh. It was a woman: "What d'ye mean by publishing fashion articles foom a threeyear old magazine?" she asked. made a bonnet according to your direc tions, and it's three years behind the style. Oh, you wretch! you mean, horrid, insignificant—oh-h!". "My dear madam," he said, "you are right. I'm house to tea to-night." The editor says he wouldn't drop the rule for anything. Everybody leaves satisfied with his paper. A Husband's Preparations. The other morning when a Detroiter seated his wife in a car on the Michigan central to make the journey to Chicago alone he took a look around him and said any more copy. Kill that article saying this lady was belle of the ball last night."

"Stop!" she cried. "Your paper is a household treasure. I don't care about the bonnet, and came to ask you to our

"Now, love, if you should want the window raised here are a dozen gentlemen who will break their necks to accommodate you."

"Yer, dear." "If you feel lonesome and want some body to talk with about affairs in Egypt, Noah's ark or the ice period, don't hesi tate to call upon any of these gentlemen."

"You won't know enough to leave the car at noon and get your dinner, and you had better ask some of them to accompany you. If they offer to pay for your meal don't be squeamish about it."

"Of course not." "You want to read to pass away time. If so, any of these gentlemen will be only too happy to purchase you half a bushel of the latest books and magazines. Be careful to save 'em for me to read when you get home." And you say to them we have been married four years; that we do not live happily togethor; I am a domestic tyrant; you have strong thoughts of procuring a divorce; you feel that you could love the right sort of a husband; you like orang and peanuts; you are innocent and confiding; you have never traveled; you are afraid of getting lost in Chicago, and you

"Good-bye, darl."

And wasn't it strange that not one single man in that car even spoke to that lady in a ride of three hundred miles?
