THE EMOTIONAL SEX.

FACTS ABOUT THE WOMAN QUESTION.

What Professor Huxley Thinks on the Subject—Mrs. Livermore at a Political Convention.

The "woman question" is generally discussed by men with an air of pity and of affected indignation. The most serious arguments against the gentler sex, however, is their "emotional nature." It is this which renders them for any grave duties than making themselves attractive to the lords of creation, and the training of children. If this last, however, with the other great duty of making men comfortable, is the especial sphere of women, then, as nothing requires sounder judgment, self-possession and nerve, nature, in providing the emotional temperaments, has plainly indicated to what it is best suited.

Professor Huxley has recently borne emphatic testimony to the peculiar fitness of the emotional sex for offices which emotion often fatally disturbs. He said, at the recent distribution of prizes at the London Congress of Medicine for Women: "The experiment has shown that there are hundreds of women who have the capacity and power to do the work of medical practitioners just as well as it has been done by the great majority of their brothers. Why, under such circumstances, they should not be allowed and encouraged to take up the profession I cannot understand. It may interest you, as I happened for the past twelve months to be a member of the Medical Act Commission, if I say a word or two as to the results of the examination. I am obliged to speak guardedly, because it was only this morning that I signed the report of the commission, which has not yet been laid before her majesty. But I think I may, without impropriety, go so far as to say that the importance of the question for medical education for women, if the recommendations of the commission be carried out, whether they be one party or many for admission to the medical register, the way will not be closed against women."

But the tabulae were turned against the superstitious sex by Mrs. Livermore, whose sarcasm is rather more subtle and searching than that of the masculine satirist. Her words were: "The medical register cannot be denied, although the conclusion drawn is not the familiar one. Indeed the favorite 'no' of the report or in depicting proceedings of a party convention is, that when Cox and Cox were routed, and Fox captured the majority of strong men, why should women, in a strong way, upon occasion? But hear Mrs. Livermore, and let the declaimer upon the 'heaven-appointed sphere of woman' be wry in his eloquence:

"To emotional for politics! I was in the Chicago Wigwag when Abraham Lincoln was nominated—the only woman on the floor of the hall, for my seat was with the reporters. I shall never forget the scene that followed. Men hugged one another with such vim that they upset the chairs, and they clapped each other on the back, crushed each other's hats or tossed them in the air and kicked them about as if they were footballs. They wept; they laughed; they danced; they stood on their seats and tossed their arms wildly in the air, and for half an hour of brass, and yelled as if with throats of brass, till the uproar was ear-splitting. The New York delegation, whose candidate had been defeated, went sulkily out of the hall, with banners reversed, wiping their eyes, evincing a quietude of good nature for the 'women' after the fashion of 'emotional' women. Similar behavior was repeated when General Grant was nominated, and at General Garfield's nomination; while the frantic scenes of emotion that women make on such occasions, and the boards of trade and stock exchanges, as the men below make and lose fortunes in gambling, will lead them to congratulate themselves that they belong to the calm, quiet and self-controlled sex. 'Women are so frivolous, so fond of dress, and so much of their world make of government an everlasting spectacular drama. Possibly, but I cannot remember to have seen women walking delightedly for hours in a torchlight procession through muddy streets, amid the thundering of cannon, and the crashing of rocks and shrapnel of colored lights. I think I have never seen them parading by daylight, clad in bits of abbreviated aprons, ornamented as to the shoulders in what seemed exaggerated horsehooves, their heads supporting an intricate mass of ribbons and feathers, and their padded coats over their well boned nearly bursting with ecstatic delight as they caught admiring glances from the other sex at balconies, and at chamber windows."

"The Drought of '91." The Terrible Condition of Things in a Jersey Town last Year.
Hucklesack Letter in Brooklyn Eagle.
"Stranger, I take it," observed an elderly man, who had just stopped and turned back to look at a group of blackberry trees around his way. "I judged that I was a stranger myself when I first came here. 'That was in the summer of '49. Hottest summer ever known in these parts. 'Any warmer than this?' I asked him.
"Sunmit, sunmit! That summer of '49 the cedar trees melted and run right along the ground! You notice how red that cedar tree is? 'I've never seen it so red as that.'
"Pretty warm," I ventured.
"Wy, sir, during the summer of '49 we kept meat right on the fire to keep it from cooking too fast, and we had to put the chickens in refrigerators to get raw eggs!"
"What was it like?"
"We had it like over a fire, and it was in 'Winn' water. Yes, sir, the temperature of 'Winn' water was so much lower than the temperature of the atmosphere that it kept the ice so cold you couldn't touch it with your finger!"
"Anything else striking that season?"
"That summer of '49? Well, guess! The Hucklesack river began to rise in June and we didn't see the sky until October for the steam in the air! And fish! fish! They were droppin' all over the place, just as if they were dead. There wasn't anything but fish until the river dried up."
"What did you have then?"
"The finest oysters and clams you ever heard of. They walked right ashore for water and they'd drink applejack right out of the demijohn and you call this hot! I feel like an overcoat!"
"What is your business?" I asked him.
"I'm a preacher," he replied. "By the way, you wanted blackberry trees. Just keep up the thumbstick side of this road until you come to a place where there are three trees. Climb up on my goose roost and you can knock down all the berries you want if you can find a pole long enough."

STRALING A WIFE'S AFFECTIONS.
A Wealthy Justice Sued by an Injured Husband.
A suit has just been commenced by Henry Downing, of Moor's Mills, Dutchess county, N. Y., against Sarah Drew, of Putnam county, for $25,000, for alienating the affections of the wife of the former. About 13 years ago Downing, who is a man over 50 years of age, married a young and respectable girl at Moor's Mills and settled down on a farm which afterward became the property of the wife. The couple lived happily until about five years ago when Mrs. Downing went to Putnam county, where she met the acquaintance of a man named Drew, who afterward called on her and she subsequently left her husband. Thus matters stood until the death of Mrs. Downing's mother, in February, 1872, when Mrs. Downing and her husband again lived together, agreeing not to have anything more to do with Drew. Last winter, however, Drew again came to the Downing place, hired the farm of Mrs. Downing, and also made arrangements with Mrs. Downing to board on the place. The matter was settled between Mr. Downing and wife, and about a month ago, seeing Drew's carriage in front of her door, Downing entered the house and quarreled with his wife, which ended in Downing being ordered out and told not to return. This was more than he could stand, and he consequently brought the action as stated above. Drew is very wealthy, being a large distiller in Putnam county, and a few years ago he represented his district in the Assembly. He is an active politician. He has been married three times, having buried two of his wives. This bar does not live with his wife, having separated from her several months ago.

MALARIA.

Malaria is an acute infectious disease which is characterized by a periodicity of its attacks. It is caused by the malarial parasite, which is transmitted to man by the bite of a mosquito. The symptoms of malaria are fever, chills, and sweats, which recur at regular intervals. The disease is most common in tropical and subtropical regions, but it is also found in temperate zones. It is a serious disease, and if not treated promptly, it can lead to death.

The malarial parasite is a small, rod-shaped organism which is found in the blood of the infected person. It is transmitted to a new host by the bite of a mosquito. The parasite enters the bloodstream and travels to the liver, where it multiplies. It then enters the red blood cells, where it continues to multiply. This causes the cells to burst, and the parasites are released into the bloodstream. This process repeats itself, causing the characteristic periodicity of the disease.

The symptoms of malaria are fever, chills, and sweats, which recur at regular intervals. The fever is usually accompanied by a headache, muscle aches, and a general feeling of malaise. The chills are usually followed by a profuse sweat, which is followed by a period of relative rest. This cycle repeats itself every 48 to 72 hours. The disease is most common in tropical and subtropical regions, but it is also found in temperate zones.

Malaria is a serious disease, and if not treated promptly, it can lead to death. The most common cause of death is due to complications, such as cerebral malaria, which can lead to coma and death. Other complications include anemia, splenomegaly, and renal failure. The disease is most common in tropical and subtropical regions, but it is also found in temperate zones.
