HOPKINS ON PATTISON.

THE BRIGHT DEMOCRATIC OUTLOOK.

An interview with Hon. Jas. H. Hopkins—His Administration for the Democratic Candidate and Hope of Success.

Following is taken from an interview of a Baltimore Sun correspondent with Hon. J. H. Hopkins, who is the Democratic candidate for Governor of Pennsylvania, and who is the only man in the State who has been elected to that office since the death of Mr. Pattison.

"What are the sources of Democratic strength in Pennsylvania, apart from the weakness of Republicans?"

"In addition to the steadfast devotion of the Democracy to their party principles we are fortunately the best relieved from any internal dissensions and dissensions by success. We have had in the past some factional fight, but there is not the slightest indication of anything of the kind in the present campaign, and our party is completely united. We have an exceptionally excellent ticket. It often happens that some one or more on a ticket has to be defended, and thus he or they become a drag upon the rest, but this year every man on our ticket is strong of himself, and so will contribute to the general strength. Mr. Pattison, our nominee for Governor, has had the education and training of a lawyer, and in addition business experience as the controller of Philadelphia, which admirably qualify him for the position of Governor. His character is irreproachable, and in Philadelphia, where he is best known, his ability and worth are fully appreciated, as has been shown by his remarkable success in being twice elected to the very responsible office of controller. He has made a splendid record in office, and has proved that he is trustworthy and diligent. Just the man who is needed to reform the hundred abuses which exist in our state government."

"What do you think of Mr. Cooper's circular, in which he called attention to the fact that Mr. Pattison was born in Maryland?"

"It was supremely silly, and it is perhaps, the highest compliment he could pay Mr. Pattison to acknowledge that he had no more serious charge to make against him than the accident of his birth. Perhaps if Mr. Pattison had been consulted on the subject of his birth place he might have preferred to have been born in Ohio, as was Mr. Cooper and other men prominent in American politics of late years. It looks like a weak attempt to revive the old Know Nothing spirit. Mr. Pattison has shown his love for Pennsylvania by making it his home, and his devotion to the interests of Pennsylvania by uniting in the effort to rescue her from the hands of the spoilers. While we are proud of Pennsylvania, we think it a good state to come from, and Mr. Cooper's circular will not influence half a dozen votes."

"What is your opinion of the relative strength of the five tickets in Pennsylvania?"

"I will hazard a rough guess. I placed Stewart's vote, as I have already stated, at 100,000; the Prohibition ticket will receive from 12,000 to 15,000 votes; the Labor vote will depend largely upon whether or not the labor troubles continue until the election, and to that extent will affect the estimate upon the two leading tickets, but I think Mr. Armstrong will poll 30,000 or 40,000 votes; Gen. Beaver, the Cameron Republican candidate, will poll 25,000 votes; and Mr. Pattison's vote may be safely placed at 300,000. These estimates are based upon a full vote, which we are very likely to have, as, in addition to the state officers, we will elect congressmen, members of the state Legislature and many county officers."

"Will the Democratic representation in Congress from Pennsylvania be aided by the present condition of Pennsylvania state politics?"

"I think it will be, unquestionably. In the first place we elect one congressman from the Allegheny district, and that is a Democratic district. General Coffroth will, I believe, redeem his district, and there is a strong probability that a Democrat will be elected from the Pittsburgh district. There are also fair chances for another from the Allegheny district, and at least one or two from the Pittsburgh district. Mr. Shallenberger, in Pittsburgh Major Errett will not doubt be the regular Republican nominee. He has always been a most obedient Cameron man, and there is no part of the state where there is a stronger anti-Cameron feeling than there is in Allegheny county. The Independent will probably nominate a candidate of their own, and if not, they will support the Democratic nomination, rather than see Errett returned. In the Allegheny district Colonel Bayne, the present member, has proved himself very able and efficient. He is openly opposed to the Arthur administration and Cameron rule, and if he secures the nomination, he will help to defeat him; if he fails to receive the nomination, his friends will aid in defeating the regular candidate. There is a somewhat similar fight in Shallenberger's district, which renders it good fighting ground. Stewart's district is always close and can be carried with a good man."

"What part will the Arthur administration take in the contest?"

"Inasmuch as Arthur and Don Cameron are sworn enemies, and the nomination of the latter in Pennsylvania against Cameron is made up of friends of Mr. Blaine, who is a native of Pennsylvania. I have no doubt that the entire power of the federal government will be lent to Mr. Cameron to carry the state, but that power has been weakened by the misuse of public patronage to aid Cameron heretofore."

"Then, surveying the whole field of Pennsylvania state politics, you consider the outlook one of much promise?"

"In my opinion as certainly as there is day of judgment, for us all November next will be the month of judgment and doom for the Cameron dynasty."

The Dream of a St. Louis Maiden.

"You are sad, Myrtle."

"The dark leaves were being blown ruthlessly across the lawn by the gusty October winds that sweep over St. Louis, while across the sky leaden clouds, whose dark front betokened a coming storm, were hurrying as if in mad haste. Holding her little head against his breast, George W. Simpson saw the sun go down in the reddened west and the shadows of night steal swiftly across the face of a desolate earth."

"Yes," replied Myrtle, locking up truthfully into the glass dark eyes of the only man she had ever loved. "Yes, my darling; it has been such a dull, dark day, with grieving skies, with the sodden, dead leaves falling and wreaths of ghastly mist drifting about. I have been thinking of you all day, sweetheart, only I have not been here at all, but away away. I hardly know where; only in the land where my footsteps have lingered I never cried for love that did not come, nor felt hungered for love's own gifts, nor felt lonely, nor desolate, nor afraid, because beneath the turquoise sky of my mystical dreamland—in the rose-leaved, love was always with me—love with strong arms, and clinging kisses, and deathless tenderness. And I knew no sorrow, nor loneliness, nor heartbreak. I was happy and content, and joyous forever."

George pressed the little form more closely to him, as if in fear that some unseen, mysterious power might suddenly take from him the one he loved so well. For an instant he did not speak; and then turning away, so that his words should not reach Myrtle's ears, he said, in low, bitter tones:

"God help and keep my loved one. She has evidently been dreaming about Chicago."

"DR. GRIMSHAW'S SECRET."

Julian Hawthorne's Sister Denies His Find.

The statement that a new and complete romance by Nathaniel Hawthorne has been found among his papers at this late day is pronounced to be incorrect by Mrs. Rose Hawthorne Lathrop, the only daughter of Hawthorne now living. She says that a fragmentary and unfinished sketch left among her father's papers introduces two of the characters and vaguely hints some of the plot referred to in the announcement. This sketch was described by Mr. George P. Lathrop, her husband, in the course of an article published in the Atlantic Monthly for October, 1872, under the title of "History of Hawthorne's Last Romance." The "last romance" then meant was the "Deliverance" in which "Septimus Felton" had been merged. All of the Hawthorne manuscripts were kept together until 1872. There were very few of them, Mrs. Lathrop says, and nothing was overlooked. They were first examined by Mr. Hawthorne and after her death by the two daughters, Miss Una and herself. Still later she and Mr. Lathrop carefully read them all, and the sketch above mentioned is the only one resembling the story now announced as practically finished. There is hardly a doubt, Mrs. Lathrop adds, that it was not "left for publication in this shape." Mrs. Lathrop also corrects the statement that her father used to dictate his compositions to her mother or that she was in the habit of transcribing them into printers' type. He dictated a romance to anybody, she says, and his hours of composition were completely secluded. Whenever he wrote for the press he wrote quite clearly.

Mr. Lathrop made a similar statement in a letter in the Boston Traveler. Mrs. Hawthorne died in London, and her two daughters only were with her, Julian Hawthorne, her only son, being then in America. In the examination of her father's papers made by Mrs. Lathrop and her husband the manuscript of the "Septimus Felton" was found, and among others this unrelated fragment. This consisted of a manuscript book written in 1858, which seems to have been the first study for a new romance. While its plot was radically different from "Septimus Felton," there were also many points of resemblance. Some time after Mr. Lathrop's marriage Hawthorne's papers and literary remains were divided, and this sketch was among those that went into the possession of Julian Hawthorne. It was the manuscript, Mr. Lathrop adds, to which he incidentally alluded in his Atlantic paper entitled, "The History of Hawthorne's Last Romance." In this paper Mr. Lathrop noted the nature of the connection between "Septimus Felton" and the "Deliverance" as having different forms for the embodiment of the integral idea which these fragments both partially interpret, although in different ways. From certain allusions in the English note-books in 1855, Mr. Lathrop inferred that Hawthorne, was without doubt, revolving the scheme of a new romance between the manuscript sketch written in 1858 and the time of writing "Septimus Felton." It is his present aim to find among the author's papers, which Mrs. Lathrop believes to be the one now announced for publication under the title of "Dr. Grimshaw's Secret." Of this sketch Mr. Lathrop speaks in his "History of Hawthorne's Last Romance" as "found among the author's papers, the date of which is not possible to determine with precision, although both its matter and form indicate that it must have been written subsequently to the journal above mentioned," and it gives as a general line of the contents "in order to exhibit in proper sequence the successive stages by which the primary conception advanced to its ultimate phase."

DORSEY'S LETTER TO GARFIELD.

The ex-Senator's Account of His Correspondence with the Late President.

Ex-Senator Dorsey was asked if his recently published letter to Garfield was sent and received by the president.

"Certainly it was," said Mr. Dorsey, "and it formed the basis of a conversation we subsequently had on the same subject."

He was asked if Garfield replied to the letter in writing.

"I wrote Garfield a number of letters," said Dorsey, "and I have a number of replies. If I remember aright, there was a reply to this particular one. These replies I do not contain my property, and I do not intend to publish them without the consent of proper parties, if at all. I may think it best to publish other letters of mine to Garfield, but do not intend to do so at this time."

"There is a current report, Mr. Dorsey, that General Swain says Garfield never received that letter," said the reporter.

"I don't think Gen. Swain has said that," was the reply.

Dickens' Announcements.

A representative of the Louisville (Ky.) Commercial has had a conversation with an amanuensis of Charles Dickens. He said: "I did shorthand work for Mr. Dickens for eighteen months. I did not take dictations for any of his novels or his fugitive pieces. He used to come to most of his articles in All the Year Round. He was a very clever gentleman to those under him. He always treated me very well indeed. Most of the people seem to think Dickens was a ready writer. This is by no means the case. He used to come into his house in St. Catharine street about two o'clock in the morning and begin dictating. He would walk up and down the floor several times after dictating a sentence or a paragraph, and asked me to read it. I would read so, and he would, in nine cases out of ten, order me to strike out certain words and insert others. He was generally tired out by eleven o'clock, and went down to his club on the Strand. A very singular thing was that he never dictated the closing paragraphs of his story. He always finished it himself."

Wouldst, But No Pie: A Romance.

Chicago Tribune.

"Do you think so, darling?"

"Yes," said the girl, passing her plate for more pie and smiling archly as she spoke, "kisses and embraces and fair words are very pleasant things—sweet lips and warm arms and loving eyes—but truth and sincerity and loyalty and purity are very much fairer and rarer."

"You are right," replied her husband, looking at her with loving tenderness.

"you are right, sweet-heart, and I will not deceive you any longer."

"What do you mean?" she asked, a look of horror passing over her face.

"There is but one piece of pie," said George W. Simpson, "and I shall tackle it myself."

Assaulted by Her Escort.

At two o'clock on Wednesday morning, while Miss Tillie Kugler, of Point Pleasant, near Easton, was returning to her home from a picnic in the vicinity, her escort, whom she had met during the evening, made improper proposals, which were indignantly spurned. The fellow then tripped her. In falling her head struck against a stone railing, her arm conscious. She rallied soon, however, and grabbing her assailant by the throat held him off until her screams had attracted attention, when the man fled. He was subsequently arrested and lodged in jail, having been fully identified by his intended victim. He gave his name as Phoenix McCarty, of Lumbertville.

In Beckford's Hall of Edm., the crowd is represented as running around, each man with an insensible woman in his bosom, and agrees not to speak of it. How many there are all around us that have the painful and distressing symptoms of biliousness or liver disease, but are kept by a false delicacy from speaking of it. But the disease is restrained by no such feeling of delicacy, but silently and assiduously works on in the dark, until the patient is compelled to call a doctor, who has much better to take in time, and to secure Hunt's Remedy, the great kidney medicine, and give the disease its death blow in its very beginning. This is the one medicine that can search out, and root out, every ill of kidneys or liver, and that cures every case of biliousness.

MEDICAL.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS.

MALARIA.

Malaria is an almost indescribable malady which not even the most talented physicians are able to fathom. Its cause is most frequently ascribed to local surroundings, and there is very little question, but this opinion is substantiated by facts. Malaria does not necessarily mean chills and fever while these troubles usually accompany it. It often affects the sufferer with general lassitude, accompanied by loss of appetite, sleeplessness, a tired feeling and a high fever the person afflicted growing weaker and weaker, loses flesh day after day, until he becomes a mere skeleton, a shadow of his former self.

Malaria once having laid its hold upon the human frame, the door of the system is thrown open to nervous diseases. The body weak and enfeebled absorbs no nourishment, but subsisting upon food, the digestive organs no longer perform their functions; the liver becomes torpid, and other organs failing to do their routine work, speedily become diseased, and dissolution and death are apt to ensue.

In addition to being a certain cure for malaria and chills and fever, BROWN'S IRON BITTERS is highly recommended for all diseases requiring a certain and efficient tonic; especially indigestion, dyspepsia, intermittent fevers, want of appetite, loss of strength, lack of energy, etc. Enriches the blood, strengthens the muscles, and gives new life to the nerves. Acts like a charm on the digestive organs. It is for sale by all respectable medicine dealers, price, 25 cents per bottle.

Be sure and get the genuine BROWN'S IRON BITTERS. Take no other.
