THE CHERRY AND APPLE

Market Fruits Compares as to Profile. S. F. Larkan, of Delaware county, con tributes the following to the Germantown Telegraph:

Various letters of inquiry as to the profitablences of the cherry as a market fruit, having reached me at various times, and not having been as fully answered as their importance demands, I appeal to the reliable old Telegraph for a more complete answer to all. We are cultivating the cherry, the apple, the pear, the grape, and the several berries for market — having cantioned against buying Plasters having abandoned the plum long since, and lately the peach, as being impractical. About three acres in all may be occupied by the wherry, and fully seven by the apple. I will first compare these. Taking an average of seasons we can receive annually six hundred dollars for cherries to three hundred for apples. We can raise twice as much other produce from a cherry-orchard as we can from an apple-orchard. The cherry-harvest lasts about a month; the

You, Mr. Editor, can speak from experisnce that we can make a cider from the apple that is equal to three-fourths of the famous champagne sold, and it is really superior for invalids. We have never at tempted to make wine from the cherry, profitable as it might be. Then, again, the apple is not subject to the losses occasioned by the gambling middle-men, the cherry-market is. Yet with all, the cherry beats the apple in profit two to one . think this experience ought to satisfy any one that there is no risk in planting the cherry as a profiable market fruit. Our canned cherries take premiums, and the dried fruit is unsurpassed by any other dried fruit found in the markers. The cherry-tree requires less care to propagate than the apple, though neither should ever be set in what is known as an "orchard," which is too much of a good thing to-gether.
