court on Monday morning at 10 o'clock they were confronted by a throng of spec tators equally as great as had been in attendance during the last two weeks. Fore-man Dickson looked decidedly worn out and the dark lines under his eyes showed plainly that the experience of the past day or two had been decidedly unpleasant. Judge Wylie asked if a verdict had been reached, to which the foreman replied that there had been no change since last Saturday, when a conclusion had been reached as to four of the defendants. To the manifest displeasure of the counsel for the defense the court replied that the time for discussion had passed and delib-eration must begin He would, therefore, send the jury back to their room and order another recess till two o'clock in the afternoon. A majority of the spectators decided to a wait further developments and remained in the vicinity of the city hall till the court reconvened. It was seven minutes after two when the jury returned, and after answering to their names reported through the foreman that then said: "I have decided to accept your verdiet. Marshal, call the defendants." Brady and Dorsey failed to respond to the first call and it was suggested that they were outside the court room and a deputy marshal was sent after them. In a few minutes they elbowed their way through the throng and took positions facing the court at the defense table. The customary question was put to the jury as to whether they had agreed upon a ver-dict, to which Foreman Dickson replied: "I am instructed by the jury upon this in-As to John W. Mr. Mer-rick then proposed that such of the devicted be required to furnish new and increased bonds. A lively scene ensued, counsel for the defense rising one after another to protest against such action, on the ground that the present recognizances were amply sufficient and perfectly valid. Considerable argument followed on both sides, Mr. Ingersoll claiming that the government counsel had made the suggestion of increased bail simply to annoy the defense. Mr. Merrick denied this and said that he respected his opinions as much as those of Mr. Ingersoll. "I don't want those of Mr. Ingersoll. "I don't want your respect," tartly replied the colonel. "I don't want yours." returned Mr. Merrick, turning quickly and facing Mr. Ingersoll. Judge Wylie interposed at this point, remarking: "Peace, peace, gentlemen." Continuing, the judge said that he thought the present recognizances valid, and would hear argument on Wednesday regarding their increase. Although discharged from further duty the jury remained in their chairs interested spectators of these proceedings, and when it appeared that the judge was about to vacate the bench, Foreman Dickson in a short address returned the thanks of himself and associates for the uniform courtesy and kindness that had been shown by the court and attaches during the trial. Judge Wylie, in reply, said: "I had hoped to decide this case. We have not reached a conclusion that I consider a settlement of this case at all. You have not seen the law as the court has, but you have exercised your power to decide on the facts. It is not for the court to express any dis-satisfaction about differences between the jury and the court. The verdict that you have rendered is not such as I would have been glad to see, but it is your verdict, your work, and the court is not responsi-

The Bribery Question. were delivered in an emphatic manner and piainly evinced the dispicasure of the court at what Mr. Ingersoll afterwards termed "such an idiotic verdict." Not satisfied with the rebuke which he had just received Foreman Dickson again ad dressed the court in relation to the charge of bribery that has arisen in this case. He inquired if it would be proper at this time to present to the court additional in formation in his possession as to the approaches that had been made to the jury. Judge Wylie replied that this was not the at the proper time. He had been told that certain scoundrels had attempted this abominable and consurable crime, and when an examination took place, if the charge was proved, he would punish the scoundrel, providing a jury could be found to convict him. Mr. Ingresoll, precipits ten another conflict by saying that he would like to learn from the jury by Mr. Merrick replied that that the governplete in every respect, and we are selling a Child's Suit for $1.50, $2.00 and $3.00. > The Story of the Bailoting. The two prise ners were immediately deserted by their quondam associates, who hastily left the court room regardless of the scapegoats in the clutches of the law officers. The jurymen went up to their former quarters for a few minutes preparatory to vacating the court house. Foreman Dickson stated that there were twelve ballots taken, and that after the END OF THE GREAT TRIAL three (Messrs. Brown, Dickson and Holmead). To convict Vaille, eleven; to acquit, one (Holmead). Brown, who held out stubbornly against the conviction of Brady and the Dorsey brothers, is one of the two colored jurors. His associate Martin, however, voted steadily to con-

viet all the conspirators except Turner.

To say that the spectators were astonished at the verdict gives a faint idea of the sentiment that prevailed. Knots of excited individuals were grouped about the city hall, expressing but one opinioncondemnatory of the verdict. In one of these Mr. Ingersoll was conspicuous, gesticulating and emphasizing the statement that it was sheer idiocy to convict Miner and Rerdell of conspiracy and exculpate Brady. This seemed to meet with general approval, and Dickson, the foreman, and his companion, Brown, came in for vigorous abuse for their. It had been contended during the entire trial that "Billy Dickson was a square man," and one of the government counsel, Mr. Merrick, vouched for him as being perfectly trustworthy and honest in his convictions. As the jurors came out of the courthouse they were surrounded by anxious inquirers who desired to learn what had transpired during the deliberations, but the jurors hurried off as if desirous to avoid any further notoriety.

Several of them were interrogated as to Foreman Dickson's sudden change from what was expected of him, and their story was to the effect that as soon as the case was given to them, and after they had retired to their rooms, Mr. Dickson read a prepared statement that he had been corruptly approached by an agent of the gov-ernment who had offered him $25,000 to convict the defendants. He took an oath on a Bible that what he said was true. Both Brown and Dickson held out stubbornly in favor of Brady and ex-Senator, Dorsey, as the records kept by the jurors attested.

Mr. Merrick was asked what steps the government intended to take and what not through with them by any means. These four men, Dickson, Brown, Holmead and Martin, who embarrassed the with head sunk low, presented a very different appearance from the defiant, flaunting personage of Sunday. Dorsey ticular acted in the jury room as if he leaned forward as if in doubt as to what were an attorney for the defense. The he had heard, while Minerand Rendell statement that he read to his fellows conserved deathly release the attempted believes as done. he had heard, while Miner and Rerdell statement that he read to his fellows conwere deathly pale. The clurt, after the clerk had put the usual questions, discharged the jury and was about to adherence the court. When he first approached journ when he was interrupted by counsel Judgo Wylie and laid before him what he for Rerdell and Miner with a motion in claimed had been attempted, the judge arrest of judgment and notice for a new told him that it was preposterous and absurd; that the government would not be a party to such a transaction. Air, Merrick's Opinion of Dickson. "In the face of this Dickson persisted in relating the story to the other jurors. It was the first thing that was done after the jury went out on Friday afternoon. Dickson swore on Bible that he was tell ing the truth, and said that the name of the briber was Bowen, a man from New York, who was in the employ of the department of justice, and that the latter presented credentials to vouch for his authority in the matter. I wish to emphatieally deny that any such person is connected with the government officers in this case. The story is too gauzy. Why should the government attempt to bribe a man to do his duty? Mr. Dickson will have to invent something else to shield him from responsibility for his action and he may have to defend himself yet. It has been said," continued Mr. Merrick, "that I vouched for Mr. Dickson as being an honest, trustworthy juror, and I did so and staked my reputation upon him.

"I am willing to confess that I have forfeited my pledge. You must under-stand that in this case the government was limited to four challenges out of 24 names presented. Mr. Dickson was objected to by my associates, but as we had to husband our challenges he was accepted upon my assurance of his integrity. I had been intimately acquainted with him for years and reposed the utmost confidence in him. I do not wish to shirk the re sponsibility for my action, and can only say that my trust has been betrayed and the pledge given to my brethren is forfeited. By consulting the record of the bailots taken by the jury I am forced to the conclusion that there was a collusion between Dickson, the two colored men, Brown and Martin, and Holmead, to prevent a verdict of guilty as to Brady or Stephen W. Dorsey. You will see that I am sustained by the facts, as Dickson voted to convict the other defendants with the exception of Turner." Judge Jere. Wilson, of counsel for Brady and Turner, in an interview expresses no surprise at the verdict, so far as his clients were concerned. He thinks the jury would not have been out an hour before returning with a verdict of acquittal for all the defendants had it not been for the violence of the charge from the bench. In the cases of Miner and Rerdell, who were found guilty, Judgo Wilson says an appeal will be taken to the court in banc, which will reverse the whole trial, and especially the strange partisan charge of Judge Wylic. The other defendants, he says, time nor the occasion for anything of the sort. The matter would be investigated might at once be brought to trial again, by the law officers of the government but it is scarcely possible. The prosecuto convict him. Mr. Ingersoll precipital attempted by any of the defen lants, and that if any bribery was attempted it came from the government spotters, who may have endeavored to ascertain if any mem-

The ucfortunate man on the ascending cage heard the other one coming, jumped out and ran into a heading close by. The wagon in its downward course struck a centre prop with such force as to drive it into the heading where the men were con-cealed, striking Richards in the side, inflicting injuries which caused his death a few minutes after reaching the surface. MALARIA

Malaria is an almost indescribable malady which not even the most talented physicians are able to fathom. Its cause is most frequently ascribed to local surroundings, and there is very little question, but this opinion is substantiated by facts. Malaria does not necessarily mean chills and fever while these troubles usually accompany it. It often affects the sufferer with general lassitude, accompanied by loss of appetite, sleepless. ness, a tired feeling and a high fever the person afflicted growing weaker

> Malaria once having laid its hold upon the human frame, the door of the systen is thrown open to nervous diseases. The body weak and enfeebled absorbs no mourish-ment, but substating upon itself, the digestive organs no longer per-form their functions; the liver becomes torpid, and other organs failing to do their routing, work, speedily become disordered, and dissolution and death are apt to
