YLASH.

THE PIREMAN'S STORY. Finsh was a white-foot sorrel, an' run on No.3: Not much stable manners-an average horse to see: Notional in his methods-strong in loves an' hates: Not very much respected, or popular 'mongst his mates; Dull an' moody an' sleepy on "off" an' quie days; castic ways:

Scowled an' bit at his partner, an' banged the With other tricks intended to designate life a

But when, be't day or night time, he heard the slarm-bell ring, He'd rush for his place in the harness with a regular tiger spring; An' watch with nervous shivers the clasp of buckle an' band, Until it was rightly evident he'd like to lend a An' when the word was given, away he would rush an' tear.

As it a thousan' witches was rumplin' up his An' wake his mate up crazy with its magnetic charm For every hoof-beat sounded a regular firealarm.

Never a horse a jockey would worship an' ad-Like Flash in front of his engine, a-racin with a fire : Never a horse so lazy, so dawdlin', an' so slack As Flash upon his return trip, a drawin' the engine back.

Now, when the different horses gets tender tooted an' old They ain't no use in our business; so Flash was finally sold

To quite a respectable milkman, who found it A-bossin' of God's creatures outside o' their Seems as if I could see Flash a-mopin' along here now A-feelin' that he was simply assistant to a But sometimes he'd imagine he heard alarm-bell's din, An' jump an' rear for a minute before they could hold him in.

An' once, in spite o' his master, he strolled in To talk with the other horses, of former fires, Whereat the milkman kicked him; wherefore us boys to please, He begged that horse's pardon upon his bended knecs. But one day, for a big fire as we was makin':

Both o' the horses we had on somewhat re semblin' Flash, Yellin'an' ringin' an' rushin', with excellen voice an' heart, We passed the poor old fellow, a-tuggin' away at his cart.

If ever I see an old horse grow upwards into If ever I see a driver whose traps behind him 'Twas that old horse, a compin' au' rushin' down the track, Au' that respectable milkman a tryin' to hole him back. Away he dashed like a cyclone for the head of Gained the lead an' kep! it, an' steered his journey free ; Dodgin' the wheels an' horses, an' still on the keenest "sllk," An' furnishin' all that district with good re spectable milk. Crowds a-yellin' an' runnin', an' vainly hol-lerin': " Whoa !" Milkman bracin' an' sawin', with never a bi Firemen laughtn' and chucklin', and holler in', " Good, go in !"

Hoss a-gettin'down to it, an' sweepin'along like sin. Finally come where the fire was, halted with a" thud."

Sent the respectable milkmen heels over head in mud: Watched till he see the engine properly work in' there-After which he relinquished all interest in the affair.

Moped an' witted an' dwilled-faded away once more : Took up his old occ'pation of votin' life

Laid down in his harness, and-sorry I am say-The milkmen he had drawn there drew his dead body away.

That's the whole o' my story. I've seen more'n once or twice, That poor dumb animals notions are full of human advice : An' if you ask what Flash taught, I simply an
