THE BURNED STEAMER.

DESTRUCTION OF THE ROBERT K. LEE.

A Horror of the Mississippi River--Some Particulars of the Dread Calamity--Twenty-one Lives Lost.

The steamer Robert K. Lee was destroyed by fire thirty-five miles below Vicksburg, early Saturday morning. So far as can be learned twenty-one persons were lost. The persons known to have perished are as follows:

Cabin passengers--Mr. Pointer, of Maysville, Ky.; M. McMillan, of Vicksburg, Miss.; Miss Adams, music teacher, on her way to Baton Rouge; an infant of Mrs. Searle, of Vicksburg, and two colored women.

Steamer hands--Frank Jones, fireman; Ophelia Jones and Martha Webb, second and third chamber maids; Thomas Fisher, Joe Murrell, Soot Cox, Thomas Collins and Irvin Duncan, cabin boys; Samuel Brown, roustabout; James Karlo, carpenter; William Westmaker, second engineer; two cooks and two assistants.

The following persons were saved: Thomas J. Spain, of Texas, La.; C. H. Chapman, of the steamer Naomi; G. O'Rourke, of New Orleans; J. M. Farman, of St. Louis; Mr. Abrahams, of Chicago; Henry Mason, of Monroe, La.; J. C. Stok, of New York; W. Neff, of New York; J. M. Freedman, of Vicksburg; J. B. Berger, of Easton, Pa.; W. W. Irish, of Carlisle, Ill.; John H. Ludwig, of New Orleans; Mrs. Searle, of Vicksburg and a lady with eight children, names unknown.

The Lee left Vicksburg Friday evening for New Orleans with five hundred bales of cotton and a large list of passengers. She had left New Orleans on the up trip last Tuesday, after having been overhauled and repainted. A crowd of people had been at the pier when she started on her evening trip, and she was fully a hundred persons had waited to see her start on the down trip, the first in five months. The boat pulled out into the stream, with lights blazing from every window, and she gathered headway and started down the river. The crowd on shore gave her a hearty cheer.

Within a half hour the lights faded from the windows one by one and soon all on board were asleep, except those on duty in the engine rooms and at the wheel. An hour passed and the great steamer was rushing down the river with her old-time speed. The clock in the pilot-house showed the hour of half-past three when the dark outlines of Point Pleasant loomed up through the darkness. Just opposite the point the pilot saw a little gleam upon the water, close by the steamer's side, but he paid no attention, thinking it was a falling spark. A moment later he detected the odor of burning cotton. Before he could open the door to look outside the fireman had been shouting "Fire!" almost simultaneously with his appearance a sheet of flame shot up into the air and disappeared. Before the crew could respond to the alarm, and before the force-pumps could be set running, the cotton bales were ablaze, the fire being spread with incredible swiftness over the newly-painted woodwork to all parts of the boat.

The flames spread so rapidly that all thoughts of saving the steamer were abandoned. The chief hope was safely. The pilot sprang back into the wheel house and rang for full speed. The engineers opened the throttles wide. Then began a race with death. The great wheels dashed the water in sheets over the decks, and their roar as they whirled around, with the hiss of the water, the hiss of the steam, could be heard in the cabin and on shore, even above the roar of flames. The vessel trembled and shook; window panes fell out in the struggles of wheels and engines. The shouts of men, the screams of women, the cries of children and the roar of the flames made a scene of the most heart-rending confusion. Men jumped overboard to escape the fire; women became insane with fright and rushed into the burning state rooms only to perish.

The Pilot's Bravery. To John Stout, the noble and brave-hearted pilot, who was at the wheel, is due the credit of those who saved. He stood the wheel and gave courage to all by firmness never before excelled, and as the vessel rounded to meet her sad fate at Yucatan. Landing the flames were fast enveloping the brave man in the pilot house, who, despite the noise of the fire, almost the last hope of escape cut off, still stood there until he gave word to the engineer that the boat had made shore.

Not until this was done did he ever for one minute take his hand from the wheel. He made his escape by the burning roof, and from there ashore. The cause of the fire is not known, but many think it was the work of an incendiary.

Engineer Perkins, who first saw the flames, notified the pilot and the boat was headed for shore.

The passengers not cut off from the bow escaped to the shore. The casualties occurred among those having berths aft. Those who succeeded in getting ashore were many of them half-clad, shoeless, and with scarcely enough clothing to cover their nakedness. Much credit is given to Engineer Perkins.

Mr. Orice Bell, second mate of the Lee, who was up at the time of the accident, says:

"I never saw anything burn so rapidly. I was at the time, and when I heard the alarm, knowing that my partner, who sleeps soundly, and other officers were in great danger, I rushed up to awaken them. The fire followed me so fast that by the time I had them all up, my partner and he were engaged in getting down stairs from the hurricane roof, and I was forced to climb over the rail. I thought I was gone at one time. She had just been freshly painted and she was just like gunpowder."

Mr. Bell, a passenger who was interviewed, seems to think the fire originated in the pastry-room of the cook house, although I don't see, said the former, what any fire was doing in there that early in the morning, as the cooks are not called before 4 o'clock.

A Mother's Heroism. Mrs. Daniel Searle, with heroic presence of mind and motherly devotion, grasped her sleeping infant, and arranging a life preserver about her person, jumped boldly into the water. By a disarrangement of the life preserver she was thrown upon her back and lost her grasp upon her child.

A later special says: "The Lee on leaving New Orleans had about 415 bales of cotton. She took on some few more at a landing below, and about sixty-five bales from a small cotton seed boat, so that when burned she had about 512 bales all told; also a large cargo of boots, shoes and drygoods, re-embarked by the Vicksburg and Natchez railroads from points north and east to Natchez and other points below this city; 20,000 feet of lumber, a large quantity of doors, blinds, sashes, etc., together with a large lot of miscellaneous freight. She stopped to wood up twenty miles below Vicksburg, at 12:30 in the morning, and remained some time. The last landing made before the fire was at Ashmead, about twenty-five miles below

Vicksburg. At the time the alarm was given the boat was under way. She was immediately headed for shore and struck the bank in a very short time, not more than three or four minutes.

PATTISON'S WARM RECEPTION. Opening of the handsome New House of the American Club.

The American club of Philadelphia moved on Saturday from their old quarters, at 113 South Broad street, to the new house on the same street, on the high floor of the new Chestnut street, and the event was celebrated by a "house-warming" in the evening, in which the members and their friends participated. The club occupies the entire building above the store floor, which has been renovated and refitted. The committee that had charge of furnishing and decorating the apartment were Anthony J. Lechler, Francis P. Haggerty, John Slevin, George McGowan, William Post and William F. McCully. These gentlemen have exhibited considerable taste and spared no expense in their selections. The large parlor floors are covered with handsome old-gold Egyptian Axminster carpet and the furniture consists of four sets of upholstered black walnut and mahogany club-house furniture, made especially for the club. The windows and intervening arches between the parlors are hung with heavy raw silk curtains of crimson and old gold colors, looped artistically to one side with red silk cords. The walls are covered with crimson and gold paper, with wide borders of a darker shade, while the ceilings are paneled with lighter color, softening the brilliant glare from five handsome gold and glass chandeliers. On the walls are hung several valuable oil paintings. A portrait of Thomas Jefferson occupies a space near the front window, while a few feet further back hangs a large painting of a ferocious-looking wild boar. Near this is a stag bounding over a field as though startled by a hunters' shot.

The bar opens off the parlor. Here stands a handsome black walnut sideboard with a large mirror and water fountain, made especially to fit the room. This room is connected with all the other apartments with electric bells.

On the floor above are the card, desk and billiard rooms. These apartments are fitted with Brussels carpets, cane office rocking chairs and black walnut desks and tables. A shuffle-board occupied the front room on the top floor. Altogether the club has a fine and airy appearance. The building in construction on the corner of Broad and Chestnut streets will also be occupied by the organization when finished. The total expense of refitting the new establishment is estimated at $8,000.

The festivities began at 7 o'clock by the band playing "See 'em up again." By 9 o'clock fully five hundred members and guests had assembled. Judge Etocok and Michael Arnold, candidate for judge, were the conspicuous persons in the parlors. They were followed by Senator Gordon, Senator Kennedy, General Snowden, John Haggard, president of the board of guardians of the poor, Ex-Assistant District Attorney Ker, of Star Route fame, George McGowan, president of the club; William Kendrick, John Slevin, Samuel Jaquet, Samuel Joseph, John Walsh, General McCandless, Lewis Ladner, Colonel R. P. Decher, Magistrate Lennon, Albert Johns, Isaac Leach, Candidate for Assembly C. E. Doyle and James J. King.

About half-past nine o'clock Robert E. Pattison entered the parlors. He was greeted with applause and hearty hand-shaking. When he could escape from his many admirers he was taken in charge by President George McGowan and escorted to the officers' private room.

The largest of the card rooms was utilized for the dining room. A long table, loaded with chicken and lobster salads, boned turkey, oysters, cold ham and tongue, fruits, pretzels and ice water tempted the guests. A figure of an owl moulded in ice at one end of the table and an ice figure of an eagle at the other end were the only decorations. No speeches were made.

Shortly after 10 o'clock the Invincible Republican club, on their home march, passed in front of the club house and played "Come through the Rye." This was thought to be very appropriate for the occasion, and the club's band responded with "Massa's in the Cold, Cold Ground." When the band followed with "If You Get There Before I Do," much significance was placed upon it by the Democratic assembly. The band finally poured out "I had a Dream, etc." and this was said to be an allusion to a dream that Beaver was indulging in and which would never be realized.

At 12 o'clock the affair broke up and Mr. Pattison modestly withdrew.

So Say We All. There is a wonderful unanimity among the physicians (and their name is legion) who have tried and prescribed Hunt's Kidney to their patients. They agree in its inestimable value as a remedy for the kidneys, liver, bladder, and urinary organs. It is a non-toxic, and works with marvelous directness and power. It is against the rules of the medical fraternity to give written testimonials in favor of "proprietary medicines," but we have scores of such testimonials from the best physicians as to the value of Hunt's Kidney. It is placed among the most valuable medicines and used in severe cases of kidney and liver disease as freely as is quinine as an anti-periodic.

With such an endorsement, one cannot go wrong in buying this medicine for himself, and following the specific directions which accompany it.

"By asking too much we may lose the little that we had before." Kidney-Wort asks nothing but a fair trial. This gives it a sure test of its value. A lady writes from Oregon: "For thirty years I have been afflicted with kidney complaints. Two packages of Kidney Wort have done me more good than all the medicine and doctors I have had before. I believe it is a sure cure."

Fast, brilliant and fashionable are the Diamond Dye colors. One package colors 1 to 4 lbs. of goods. 10 cents for any color.
