RILEY, THE BUM, DEAD.

A FAMOUS WORKER FOR CAMERON. One of the Men Entrusted to Buy Votes. How the Mollie Maguires Unce

There were few better known local char-There were few better known local characters in the anthracite coal regions than "Riley the Bum," who died in Pottsville on Wednesday. His Christian name was James, but the people in the mining patches of Schuylkill, Northumberland, Lackawanna and Luzerne counties, knew him only as "The Bum." It was in Schuylkill, however, where he figured as a Mollie Maguire, that he is best known for there his political influence was strong enough to support him for a dozen years enough to support him for a dozen years

Planned His Murdor.

Years before he took a hand in corrupt politics he was a peddler of medicine for the relief of rheumatism. This medicine he made himself and walked about the regions selling where he could. He sang capital Irish songs and was as full of jokes and quaint stories as an egg is of meat. These accomplishments, coupled with his ability to drink often and late and pay his score with the best of them, made him a great favorite with the

While on one of these peddling expedi tions, lasting a week or more, he would visit fifteen or twenty mining patches, making scores of acquaintances. As these trips followed each other very rapidly he in a few years became one of the best known men in the lower authracite region, and every year his circle of acquintances was enlarged. Then he became valuable in politics. In 1872, when he was added to the corps of advance workers the machine had in the coal regions, he was a tall, lean, round-shouldered and commenting land in the coal regions. dered and consumptive looking fellow of twenty-eight years. He had a thin, cun-ning face, sandy hair and a sandy mous-tache. His clothing was, as a rule, shabby, except when he attended a state or national convention or visited Washington. His owlish and nomadic habits led to his being dubbed "The Bum," which name he ever afterwards retained. As he grew older he became thinner and more foxy looking, but otherwise his appearance was un-changed up to the time of his death. He could read and write and his memory was remarkably good. In local political strug-gles he was strictly impartial, publicly ad-mitting that he worked for the man who gave him the most money. On national questions he was for Cameron and Hartranft first, last and all the time. In the spring of 1872, when living in Girardville, he joined the Mollie Maguires and became quite popular with the members of his branch, which was one of the most noted in the region. Being a peaceable and very superstitious man, "The Bum" was never trusted by such revolutionary Mollies as Jack Kehoe and Barney Dolan, who when he declined to take part in a breaker burning excursion, resolved that he was a dangerous member and should be put out of the way.

While his murder was being planned
"The Bum" emigrated to St. Clair and sought the protecting influence of his uncle, Martin Dormer, a fighting man with a record. Fearing that the Mollies would kill him for running away Riley went to Pottsville, where a few weeks later Kehoe and a number of other members, who were afterwards hung, came over and assured the "Bum" that he had nothing to fear if he kept his mouth closed about the secrets of the order. He agreed and was reinstated in the good opinions of all the Mollies. Later it was openly charged that he was instrumental in "fixing" the Mellie vote in Schuylkill and Northumberland in the fall of 1872. This he never denied. The "Bum's" in-timacy with the worst Mollies in the region got him into trouble in 1877, when so many of the members were arrested. He escaped, however, and admitted that he did so on account of his political friends. In 1872 he was entrusted with $3,000 to "fix" the Norwegian and three or four other townships in Schuylkill county for the Republican party. From that time he entered deeper into the confidence of his political employers and openly boasted in 1875 that they dared not go back on him, as he had too much damaging evidence against them. From 1873 until the time of his death he had a finger in the buying of delegates to every county convention held in Schuylkill, and proudly admitted that he knew every purchasable vote that was worth a fig between the Susquehanna river and Schuylkill Haven. In 1873 he spent $2,000 in attempting to corrupt the Labor Reform county conventions. tion. He failed, and later it came out that the money came from Harrisburg and that for twenty-four hours before the convention the "Bum" had scoured the county buying delegates' votes. He was a staunch supporter of General J. K.

Sigfried and it was to no small extent due to the "Bum's" labors that the general was made chairman of the county committce in 1880. "The Bum" attended every national convention held since 1870 and his gaunt figure could always be seen hovering around the notable politicians at Pennsylvania state conventions. In 1876 he was a member of the Centennial police force and drew his salary regularly without leaving Pottsville. He claimed to hold a sinecure in the Philadelphia custom house in 1881, and whether his story was true or not he certainly paid monthly visits to the city mentioned and returned with money, which he declared was salary. Though Senator Cameron, General Hartranft, Governor Hoyt and such less influential friends as J. K. Sigfried, Congressman C. N. Brumm and Sam Losch "The Bum" always managed to have plenty of money. When taken sick he held a government position in Washington. He was brought from Washington to Pottsville by Sam Losch. The dead man leaves a widow and two children, of whom he was very fond.

Detroit Free Press. There were three or four of us Michi ganders at the same hotel in Montgomery, and all were amazed at the sight of so many colored men loafing the time away on the street. The man from Ionia county finally thought he'd make a few inquiries, and beckening to a stalwart black who had spent the last two hours on the curbstone, he asked: "Have you any work to do?" "Not jist now, sah."

"Have you ever tried farming?" "Oh, yes."
"And how did you come out?"

"Mighty slim, sah. De white folks down heah, doan' encourage de black folks 'tall." " How's that?"

"Wall, in de fust place, dar's de rent of de land. Dey might jist as well frow off de rent, but der won't do it. Den it I git de land an' sot out to borry a mule nobody will lend me one. "Suppose you had a mule?"

Those desiring to make money on small and medium investments in grain, provisions and stock speculations, can do so by operating on our plan. From May 1, 1881, to the present date, on investments of $1,000 to $1,000 cash profits have been realized and paid to investors amounting to several times the original investment, still leaving the original investment making money or payable on demand. HIS FUNERAL PYRE.

Awiul Death of a Notorious Negro Mur-defer.

The jail at Nashville, Nash county, N. in which Jerry Cox, notable as one of the most desperate criminals ever known in the state, was confired under sentence of death, was fired by him and entirely destroyed. About midnight people were awakened by the roar of the flames, and many hastened to the jail, but on their arrival they found the walls and bars glowing red with heat, while the murderer within was screaming in his death agony. In less than an hour the jail was a mass of ruins. Early this morning the body of Cox was found and a great crowd stood appalled at the terrible fate which had overtaken the brutal merderer. Cox was one of the leaders in the famous Cox was one of the leaders in the famous Worley murder, near Goldsborro, in the early spring of 1878. One night he and others of a gang of desperate swamp negroes murdered Mr. Worley by beating out his brains, after enticing him into the yard of his house. They then caught his wife as she ran out on hearing the dying groans of her husband, criminally assaulted her repeatedly in the presence of her little children and then beat out her brains with clubs and left her on the floor of her house in a pool of blood. The whole of her house in a pool of blood. The whole state rang with the story of the crime, and after a hot pursuit the murderers were captured. Four negroes were subsequently executed on one gallows at Goldsboro, having been convicted principally upon the testimony of Jerry Cox, who, by turning state's evidence, escaped the gallows, but narrowly missed lynching, and had to be removed secretly by the authorities. For four years the whereabouts of Cox was a mystery, but he finally made his appearance near Battleboro, where, on November 19 last, he committed another murder. For a year before that time Cox, who was a coal black negro of most repulsive form and features, had lived with a degraded white women named Mary Hawkins. Maddened by drink and jealously he on several occasions nearly killed her, and she at all times performed most menial offices for him. He, having pretended to doubt her faithfulness, met her one day at the house of a negro woman. They quarrelled, he struck her a went away. She followed him to where he slept—under a water tank—when he took her to a secluded place near the railroad track and cruelly murdered her. For hours he watched by the side of the body, and, before daylight, placed it on the track of the Wilmington & Weldon railroad, where the wheels of a lightning express train mangled it horribly, cutting off the head. The station agent saw the body, aud, not far away, discovered Jerry Cox and the negro woman watching. Cox, being interrogated, said that the Hawkins woman had walked on the track while drunk and thus met her death. He became greatly excited and was at once At the trial the evidence of Cox's guilt was overwhelming, and in a few minutes after being charged the jury rendered a verdict of "guilty of murder." Cox was accordingly sentenced to be hanged at Nashville September 20, but took an ap-peal to the supreme court. While in jail Cox made a desperate attempt to kill the jailor with a piece of chain and padlock. He was beaten into submission, but several times afterwards he broke chains and and was otherwise so violent that hand-cuffs could not be kept on him. He shouted cut continually that the Lord broke his bonds. Frequent threats of lynching him were made during imprisonment, as the negroes and whites alike bated and feared
