FRIDAY EVENING, OCT. 18, 1882,

BY THE RIVER. We went to wa!k by the river, And the sun was dim in the west; In a mist of sorrow the world was clad, For my heart was full and my heart was sau With a love that was uncontessed; And mournful the murmur the foliage had,

By the winds of summer oppressed She was near, so near I could touch her hand An 1 the boisterous winds, at play, To my lips leaped up with a tragrant strand Of her silk-soft hair that had slipped its band Yet she seemed to be far away ; And cismal the shadows that fell on the land In the track of the vanishing day.

She had plucked a spray of the clustered grace A branch of the locust bloom ; But the milk-white flowers against her face. And their faint, sweet odor recalled a trace Of a vision of death and doom; And down where the waters were falling Rose the plaint of a bird in the gloom.

We were strayed at last by the restless beat Of the billows that sadly rolled, And they broke in sobs as they kissed the feet Of the listless lover they came to greet; And they begged that he might be bold, Till, moved to the tale by their sympathy sweet-Oh, the story of love that he told! We sat at rest by the river, And the sun was low in the west;

In a golden glory the world was clad, For my heart was free and my heart was glad With its longing at last confessed; And tender the murmur the foliage had By the winds of summer caressed.

She was close, so close there was hardly room For our passionate hearts to play; And the milk-white spray of the locust bloo It was crushed and crumpled to rich perfume As content on her breast it lay ; Oh, bliss of the blossoms that welcomed their

And that died in so royal a way! From a bird that swung on a branch o'erhead Fell a strain that was low and sweet ;

And the waves rolled up where the wavelet And they sang for joy that the gloom was fled From the lover they came to greet. I' His head on the mountains of heaven," they

"And the valleys of bliss at his feet." We came in peace from the river; And the sun was lost in the west; And the night was come with its star-lit skies

But the mist was gone that had dimmed my And my heart was at last at rest; Yet why was it burdened with sorrows and sighs

Till my love to my love was confessed ? But the heights of passion, oh, who shall scan ?

And its mysteries who shall prove ? Or shall raise the curtain that hides its plan As it litts to blessing or sinks to ban, Save the angels in heaven above ? For strange is the passionate heart of a m And strange is the passion of love. Oh, sweet is the passion of love !

... Magnificent promises sometimes end i pairry performances." A magnificent exception to this is found in Kidney-Wort, which tion to this is found in Alliney-Wort, which invariably performs even more cures than it promises. Here is a single instance: "Mother has recovered," wrote an illinois girl to her Eastern relatives. "She took bitters for a long time but without any good. So, when she heard the virtues of Kidney-Wort she got a box and it has completely cured her liver complaint."
