Atificial Incubation. New York Times There is not the slightest reason to believe that when the ancient, Egyptians invented a method of artificially hatching eggs they were influenced by any desire to lessen the labor of hens. Their sole object was to produce more chickens than the hens produced. Although we may give a setting hen credit for the best possible intentions, it must be admitted that she is a very clumsy bird. She will tread on her eggs and will leave more or less of them out in the cold. Besides, her capacity to hatch eggs is limited by her size. There are very few hens who can hatch out more than a dozen chickens, and, of course, if a man wishes to raise chickens on a large scale be must supply himself with an im mense number of hens. Artificial incubation obviates all these difficulties. As invented by the Egyptians, and extensively practiced in our own day, a thousand eggs can be hatched at one time in a single in cubator, and not one of these runs any risk of being broken or chilled.

The immense success which has attended the artificial incubation of chickens in France recently attracted the attention of Dr. Tavernier, a learned and ingenious physician. He was attached to a hospital for foundlings, and although the position gave him an admirable opportunity for experimenting with new medicines, he was a humane man, and he was annoyed at the large number of foundlings who died within the first six months of their life. The majority of those admitted to the hospital were weak and sickly, but in that respect they did not differ from the majority of all sorts of French infants. Dr. Tavernier felt that it was a reproach to medical science that French infants could not be cultivated with as much success as French chickens, and he resolved to try what artificial incubation-if it may be so called-would accomplish if applied

The doctor constructed a child incubator on precisely the model of the ordinary chicken incubator. It was a box covered with a glass side furnished with a soft woolen bed and kept at the temperature of 860 Fahrenheit by the aid of hot water. He selected as the subject of his first experiment a miserably made infant, one, in fact, that had rashly insisted upon be ginning the world at an injudiciously early period. This infant was placed in the incubator, provided with a nursing bottle, and kept in a dark room. To the surprise of the doctor it ceased to cry on the second day after it was placed in the incubator, and although it had been a preterna urally sleepless child, it sank into a deep and quiet sleep. The child remained in the incubator for about eight weeks, during which time it never once cried, and never remained awake except while taking nourishment. It grew rapidly, and when, at the expiration of sixty days, it was removed from the incubator it presented the appearance of a healthy infant of at least a year old.

Delighted with the success of this ex the usual pins and colic and exhibiting the usual free usess of French infants, This child conducted itself while in the i cubator precisely as its predecessor had done. It never cried; it spent its whole time in sleep, and it grew as if it had made up its mind to embrace the caree. of a professional giant. After a six weeks stay in the incubator it was removed and weighed. During this brief period it had doubled its weight. It had become so strong and licalthy that it resembled a child of three years old, and it could actually walk when holding on to a convement piece of furniture.

vernier of the vast advantages of artificial child incubation. He immediately proceeded-with the permission of the authorities of the hospital-to construct an incubator of the capacity of four hundred infants, and in this he placed everyone of the three hundred and sixty infants who were in the hospital on the 10th day of February last. With the exception of one who died of congenital hydrocephalus and another who was claimed by its repentant parents, the infacts were kept continuously in the incubator for six menths, when they were removed in consequence of having outgrown their narrow beds. The resul will seem almost incredible to persons who are unfamiliar with the reputation of Dr. Tavernier, and have not seen the report made to the French government on the sub ject by a select committee of twelve. The average age of the infants last February was 3 m oths and 3 days—the youngest being less that 12 hours old and the eldes: not more then 11 months. Their average weight was 16 pounds, only 1 of the entir 360 having attained a weight of 32 pounds At the end of six months of artificial incubation the average weight of each infant was 84 pounds, and there was not one who would not have been supposed by a casual abserver to be at least eight years

In other words, six months of artificial incubation did as much in the way of developing Dr. Tavernier's foundlings as eight years of ordinary life would have done. The infants were strong and healthy, as well as big; they walked within a week after leaving the incubator. and most of them have since learned t talk. These results surpassed Dr. Taver nier's most enthusiastic expectations, and there can be no doubt that his system of artificial child incubation will be adopted not only in every child's hospital in France, but in every private family throughout the civilized world.
