And if she loves me, she will wear The pure white rose to-night : But if my love deny me grace. To bid my hope be dead,

In her sweet bosom she will place The fatal one, the red.

In hope and tear the day I spend; Each moment slowly goes, For all my future doth depend Upon a simple rose. "Oh, that the night would come," I sigh, Then wish 'twere only noon; For me, if hope be doomed to die,

The night will come too soon.

She comes! and with her comes a breath Of roses on the air; And be it life or be it death

I look upon my fair. I see the white rose on her breast, The red 10se on her check; What need of words to tell the rest.

So plain the roses speak! - W. H. Smiley in Washington Republic. SEVERED BY FATE.

How ingomar Trod Lightly on the Heart-From the Chicago Tribune.

"Pass the pie."
Ingomar McCloskey moved uneasily in his rococo pants as these words fell in soft cadences upon a medallion-like car that projected out into the starry night from a head whose Grecian curves would attract attention anywhere north of La Porte. The day had been a beautiful one, and now that the shadows in the glen were lengthening and the birds were twittering in a elecpy fashion amid the boughs of the locust trees, Ingomar and Gladys Perkins were sitting silently on the back porch eating apple pie.
"Why do you doubt my love, darling?"

"Why is it, after I have tole you so many, many times-told you with all all the passionate carnestness of a woman's first and only love that you are my idol, that your hopes are my hopes, your fears my fears— have told you this with my arms around your neck and my face close pressed to yours—why is it, I ask, that you cannot believe me; that a look of doubt is ever on your face?" Deeper still have grown the shadows in the glen. The crickets have begun to chirp in their noisy way, and the first rays of moonlight that came down to earth in a silvery shower between the leaves of the locust trees bring into bold relief the haggard outlines of a sawbuck that lies restfully against the woodshed. "I demand an answer," says the girl in an imperious whoa Emma way that so well befits her. "Why do you doubt my

"I do not," answers Ingomar. "It is false!" exclaimed Gladys. "I can see the doubt in every line of your features. What else can it mean ?"

Leaning over the table Ingomar Mc-Closkey looked steadily at Gladys for au instant, and then, speaking in the cold, cynical way he had learned in Kenosha, he said: "I was doubting whether the pie would hold out."

Miss Thursby's Nightingaic.

A very pretty story is told of a night-ingale owned by Miss Thursby, and which accompanied her on her travels, as fol-

She had given a concert at Prague be fore an aristocratic audience, in which each person vied with his neighbor in doing her honor. Plaudits and presents were showered upon her, and people wondered how it was that the noted melomaniae and conneisseur. Prince Wittgenstein, should have given no practical token of the admiration which he expressed. Next day the prince called at her hotel, accompanied by a servant carrying a bird cage. "Mademoiselle," he said, "I am at a loss to express fitly my rapture at your singing; I consider that there is not on earth one other voice own nothing more precious. Pray teach them how to sing." All of this might have passed for a neatly turned compliment if the nightingales had been ordinary nightingales, but they were a good deal more than ordinary birds, they were historical birds, and the red cross mark upon their breasts indicated them to be the lineal descendants of a couple of warbiers brought from Palestine by a crusading ancestor of the prince, who, taken prisoner at the siege Jerusalem, had been solaced always during his long captivity by their visits to his dungeon window. When the knight's ransom had been paid he asked that his feathered friends might be given to him. The Soldan consented, and from that time there has always been one couple and no more red cross nightinga'es in the family of Wittgenstein, from which they passed into the possession of Miss Thursby; and, as one of the birds has died without heirs, the race will become extinct; the survivor is as lively as a cricket, but it disdains any mate of a less exalted parentage, and thus ends the legend of the Bohemian nightingale, from whose notes the prima donna has learned her "Chanson d'Oisseau."

There is hardly an adult person living but is sometimes troubled with kidney difficulty, which is the most prolific and dangerous cause of all diseases. There is no sort of need to have any form of kidney or urinary trouble if Hop Bitters are taken occasionally. 016-2wd&w

** "Necessity is the mother of invention." Diseases of the liver, kidneys and bowels brought forth that sovereign remedy Kidney-Wort, which is nature's normal curative for all those dire complaints. In either liquid or dry form it is a perfect remedy for those terri-ble diseases that cause so many deaths. A pint of the finest ink for families or
