Germantown Telegraph. Not many of our readers who have not been abroad at this period of year, when the subject is more or less always discussed, know how much our autumn scenery is appreciated by Europeans. The leaves of most of their trees die off black or brownish, nothing we believe except the larch putting on anything like an ap proach to the gorgeous colors of our woods and forest trees. Pictures of Ameri can scenery are among the most popular in European collections; and yet much as they are prized by their owners, there is generally a lingering doubt that the reality is equal to the reppresentation. Many have been known to come to this country that they may see and enjoy these great natural beauties, which many of us see and look on with scarcely any emotion at all. Our country friends, who live in the midst of these great beauties, have no idea how much they are envied at this season by city people, whom it is so much the fashion of country-folks to wish to live among. Hardly a man of any sensibility, who goes to his counting house day after day, but wishes as ardently he could spend his days in the country of the country in the country, as the countryman so ofter desires to be in the citizen's place. At this season the leaves seem to be at unusual pains to look their prettiest, and to put on their best. By the time we get through we sha'l have nearly six weeks of this annual spectacle, in consequence of the great variety of our fields and forests -more, we have heard botanists say, than most parts of the Union can name. First and earliest to change this year we noted the red maple. In some cases this had on its orange and brown by the end of September. The great dogwood with its rich blood color a me next, and next the dwarf sumae and the Virginia caleper. Even the poison vine goes into the general re-joicing, and after the others named takes on a sort of crimson orange of so beautiful a tint that one can almost pardon its evil spirit which makes it so heartily at other seasons despised. Then follows the tuliptrees with their golden yellow, and the sugar and Norway maples with their lemon and crimson; and by this time we are nearly half through the showy season. But by the time most of these leaves fall, the sour or black gum turns to winy pink, the sassafras to crimson red and yellow tinted, and the white cak and white ash a sort of purplish brown. To these follow the Stag's Horn sumac, with its curious mixture of sourlet and green, the red and pink oak, blackberries, and so-forth, in endless variety. Scarcely, however, have all these fluished their hyens of rejoicing for their summer's life, than the common cultivated cherry, now wild everywhere in this region, takes up the same story, and this with the true scarlet oak, keeps up the glorious strain often till far into

November. For those who know how to enjoy life rationally, there is no pleasure like a residence in the country at this season of the year; and those who already living in the country and yet have never taken pains to cultivate those tastes which would lead to a full enjoyment of all these things, know not how much pleasure in life they lose. If young people were taught to appreciate and study these pleasing phases of country life, it would have much to do with making them contented and satisfied. Even the richest man desires riches only that he may enjoy it, and often spends largely to have what country people get for nothing

Mr. Travers and Two Confidence Men. New York World.

Mr. William R. Travers tells the fol lowing story on himself, and vouches for its being a new and true one : As he was leaving his office on Thursday last a well dressed man approached him and, greeting him very cordially, said : " How do you do, sir? I am very glad to see you. When did you arrive in the city?"

"E-er-e-ex-coccuse me-me, sir," said Mr. Travers. "You-you have evidently mis-mis-mistaken me for a s-s s somebody else."

"And you are not Mr. Andrews, or Poughkeepsie?" queried the man.
"N-n-no, sir; my name is Tr-Tr-Travers," he replied, whereupon the man, with many apologies, made off.

Mr. Travers quietly walked up Broadwar, looking in the shop-windows, as is his habit, when he was suddenly stopped by a man, who, rushing up to him, offered his hand and said: "How do you do, Mr. Travers? I am so glad to see you! heard you were in town and have been "Pa pa par pardo me sir," said Mr.

Travers, blandis My name is too Ter-ter-Travers; I.I.I am Mr. Au-Au-Au-Andrews, from Pok-Pok-Poughkeepsie.'
