THE HORSES.

The Present Situation and Prospects of Some of Them.

The despotism of Boss Cameron in Pennsylvania draws near to its end, in an imminent overthrow from which recovery is next to impossible.

Boss Robeson cries out for help in New Jersey, and calls Keifer, who had just been rebuked by his own constituents, to give him a certificate of character.

Boss Hipple Mitchell was recently rebuked by a large assembly packed in favor of his return to the Senate by the Northern Pacific railroad corporation.

Boss Page, author and manager of the River and Harbor bill, is threatened with the loss of his Republican district in California.

Boss Hoar, in Massachusetts, has taken the tremors at the possible election of Ben Butler, and predicts the end of the world if his fears should be realized.

Boss Teller, after spending a month in repairing the damage done in Colorado, has agreed to abandon the interior department to restore many broken rails, and is now mounting guard to prevent further mischief.

Boss Keys, in Wisconsin, has dislocated the oil machine so badly that the ancient, with all the potteries engineers, has not been able to return it to working order. The congressional delegation in that state will probably be reversed.

Boss Chandler is menaced with a crash in New Hampshire, notwithstanding the navy, the money put there, and the prestige of a lobbyist transformed into a member of the cabinet.

Boss Logan found an excursion to New and Old Mexico preferable to a sojourn among a disaffected constituency in Illinois, who have longed for the opportunity to give the third term a dose of his own prescription.

Boss Windom is shocked that his millions, acquired by economy in Congress, and multiplied by self-sacrifices in the treasury, should become a subject of public discussion, and he turns up Danand, his competitor for the Senate, with the fiercest denunciation of a patriot about to lose a most profitable place.

Boss Hubbell sees the prospect in Michigan as through a glass darkly, and wonders at an intimation that may send Perry back to the Senate. But Hubbell has a source of consolation. He handled the assessments.

Boss Mahone finds his grasp in Virginia weakening daily, and demands of Hubbell many thousands, with a threat of holding unless they are furnished quickly.

OUR "PRACTICAL" ADMINISTRATION.

How Governmental Duties Have Been Neglected.

A Washington special to the New York Sun says:

Although the president and with one or two exceptions the cabinet are away, deputies, assistants, and minor officials are slowly resuming their places. However the government has got on for the last three and four months is past accounting for.

The go-as-you-please idea is the prevailing one. They may be used to the departments will see it at a glance.

"Who cares?" is written everywhere. Demoralization is not an inch beneath the surface. The recent elections and the political outlook have not helped matters.

In one department at least results are appearing above the clouds. It is in the revenue and truthful saying: "When the cat is away the mice will play."

If during the present summer and fall there has been more of it than ever before, it is because never before has there been so much of absence.

There has been such a disregard of the tradition that the public officials were to be abandoned to enable officials to enjoy a protracted season of pleasure, but were to be watched over with unabated vigilance, as though the wheels of government were to run and keep on running, no matter who was away.

The prodigality of Congress, the dishonest combinations for depleting the public treasury, were fruit from the same tree. It follows naturally that in all branches of the public service there is a similar influence and the same have operated, similar results are to be expected.

Officials long in the public service express their fears, for they know what are the inevitable consequences of incapacity and inattention.

The revolution is coming not too soon. In the departments in Washington alone is a vast army of officials, whose expulsion is needful for the public good. Nothing was ever truer than that this fact is felt throughout the departments, and the more so as you get near the head.

Hundreds of competent officials, who have summured and wintered in the public service, will tell you how great beyond the power to estimate them will be the benefits of a change thorough and incalculable. Nobody knows so well as they how it is.

What men feel they will manifest, though not intending it. The great army of department officials, knowing as they do how great the dangers are for a complete renovation of the service, botry in a thousand ways the expectation that it is coming. Feeling that it should come they know it will come sooner or later.

This state of things tends to explain in part the free and easy, go-as-you-please methods and the carelessness we see at a glance in the public service. It is the natural manifestation which always attends a knowledge among men that their time draws nigh.

Father is Getting Well.

My daughter says, "How much better father is he now!" He is getting well after his long suffering from a disease of several years' duration, and he is now using your Bitters. A lady of Rochester, N. Y.

A coward can be a hero at a distance; presence of danger tests presence of mind. Presence of danger tests presence of mind. Presence of danger tests presence of mind.
