WHAT HENSEL THINKS.

INTERVIEW WITH THE CHAIRMAN.

The significance of the Victory—The Future of the Party.

Philadelphia Evening Telegraph interview with State Chairman, U. S. Hensel. The rooms of the Democratic state committee in the Girard house early this (Wednesday) morning presented a scene in marked contrast with the bustling activity which has characterized them during the last three months. Not a sound disturbed the stillness. The doors were absolutely deserted. The door creaked on its hinges and the windows were tightly closed. A large lithograph portrait of the next governor under which some zealous Democrat had scribbled "30,000 majority," hung on the wall. The secretaries' desks were covered with books, and papers and country weeklies with portraits of the Democratic standard bearer designated by blue pencil marks littered the chairs and the floor. The ink bottles on the desks and tables were securely corked and the pen-holders lay beside them. At 10 o'clock the scene changed. A white capped housemaid entered, hastily brushed the dust from the books and papers, and as lastly withdrew. A telegraph messenger dashed in, deposited a yellow envelope on one of the tables, and darted out again. A colored waiter peeped in, and seeing no one stir, passed on. Then Chairman Hensel, bustling and busy, swung the door wide open and entered with a brisk, active tread. His face was wreathed in smiles, and a merry glimmer shone in his eye.

The first thing he did after greeting the reporter was to brush a huge pile of country papers containing marked columns of criticism, which lay on one of the tables, into a waste basket. "There's no use for them now," he said in explanation. Chairman Hensel's views.

"What is your opinion of the result?" asked the reporter. "It is apparently a far reaching victory," was the reply, "though I am not all surprised at the extent of it. You will see by this guess (reaching for and opening a sealed envelope that had been standing on the table for several days) that I predicted 25,000 plurality for Pattison, half the congressional delegation, 104 Democratic members, the lower House, 4 Independents, and the gain of the senators in Bucks, Montgomery, and Crawford. I have not been far off."

"Notwithstanding the profuse publications of the committee, its extensive printing, and its wide correspondence, sometimes reaching 25,000 active workers at a single delivery, the entire expenditures of one campaign certainly vindicated the policy of wasting no money on torchlight processions, big parades, etc. The 'bar' and the brass band in politics henceforth go to the rear with the bosses.

"The election of the Democratic state ticket has hardly to be claimed as a partisan, much less as a personal victory for anybody. The harmony of the state convention, the excellence of its platform—I can say this because, though I reported it, I did not draft a line of it—the exceptionally fit, bold, and original record and private character of all its candidates, had much to do with our success. Mr. Pattison's brilliant official career gave vitality to the party in every quarter of the commonwealth, and the dignity of his conduct in the canvass, the sincerity and impressiveness of his speeches and his manly presence, made him votes wherever he went. No candidate ever had the confidence of his party to the same extent. None ever so disarmed and silenced the opposition as his associates on the ticket were all men of full stature. There was no tail to our ticket. Every man on it was fit for any place. It was a marvel of symmetry and of strength as the returns from the home counties of each of them will show. This of Democratic state candidates carrying Toga, Indiana Huntington counties! and yet this is what Elliott, Africa and Clark have respectively done.

"I feel great personal satisfaction, of course, in the congratulatory addresses, many of them approving of the campaign management, but he would have been a blunderer, indeed, who could not have won the fight with a divided Republican party and such reckless management as it had to oppose us. Besides, the whole party was at the back of the state committee. There were no young Democracy and old Democracy trading on each other's corns; no friction of the factions. Wallace and Randall opened the campaign from the same platform. If the whole party was at the back of Mr. Hensel's organization of the city as the best that could have been made. It was the key of the situation and our buckler in the fight. It is hardly fair to specify any single cause or individual to which we attribute our success, for I know of no element in the party that did not do its best.

"To nothing do the Democrats owe more than to the Republicans who sank their party prejudices and helped to overthrow boss rule. Many no doubt voted direct for Pattison, and in selling his majority reduced Stewart's vote. They have no need to be ashamed of it, and they need not fear that the administration of Governor Pattison will not be such as to vindicate their course. The Democratic party has no future—great in view of its present sweeping victories—unless it institutes and enforces everywhere the policy of honest and economical government, and wherever and whenever it does that, it will draw to its support a very large majority of the people. I sincerely trust that, if we have obtained control of Congress and the state Legislature, as seems almost certain, the first concern of the members will not be to find places for party workers, but to see how many existing useless places can be abolished and increased salaries abated. Beyond this I am not worried for the future. If the party does what is right, results will take care of themselves to its abiding welfare. My greatest pleasure in this victory—next to the patriotic satisfaction of repelling and government with honest rule—is in the satisfaction it affords to the hundreds of thousands of Democrats who have been steadfast in their adherence to the party in the days of its adversity and trial. They are the political salt of the commonwealth. They have kept the faith and saved the ark. But none the less grateful is this victory to the Democratic women of the state. Their abiding faith and loyalty at last finds recompense."

"Dear Beaver—Don't Talk."

Among the letters and papers on Chairman Hensel's desk was a torn envelope which attracted no little attention. A broad smile illumined Mr. Hensel's face whenever he looked at it. It was an ordinary white envelope soil and crumpled. In the upper right hand corner was a picture of the Lochiel house in Harrisburg and below it the words, "M. S. Quay, Personal." The envelope had been folded into quarters, and in one of the quarters were four words written in pencil in a large scrawling hand: "Dear Beaver, don't talk." The well-known signature of the ex-secretary of the commonwealth was appended to the message.

The story of the message is interesting, and the smiles played about Chairman Hensel's mouth as he told it to inquiring visitors. Shortly after the Republican state convention a reporter called on Col. Quay at the Lochiel house, in Harrisburg, and endeavored to interview him on the situation. Col. Quay declined to talk and the reporter then picked up his hat, saying as he backed out of the room: "If you won't talk, I'll go to see him now." "Hold on a moment, young man," said the colonel, "I want you to take a message to Beaver for me." He then drew a torn envelope from his pocket, folded it into quarters, and scrawled hastily in one corner, "Dear Beaver—don't talk." "M. S. Quay." The reporter took the envelope, showed it to the general and then thrust it into his pocket for safe-keeping. A few days ago he presented it to Mr. Hensel, who has had several face-similitudes of the message made.

"Troubles often come from whence we least expect them." Yet we may often prevent or counteract them by prompt and intelligent action. Thousands of persons are constantly troubled with a combination of diseases. Dissolved kidneys and costive bowels are their tormentors. They should know that Kidney-Wort acts on these organs at the same time, causing them to throw off the poisons that have clogged them, and so relieving the whole system.

LANCASTER WATCHES.

"THE REPUTATION OF THE LANCASTER WATCHES is world-wide, and is the result of the following very direct and satisfactory

Canada Opinions

OF THE Lancaster Watch

"First-Class Time-Keepers."

Messrs. ZIMMERMAN, McNAUGHT & Co. Wholesale Agents, Toronto, Canada, says: "Our Watch gives entire satisfaction to the trade here. Our experience and we can cheerfully recommend it to jewelers as being a first-class time-piece in every particular. It costs but a few cents more than the ordinary watches from our customers if they were desired."

Mr. B. H. RICHARDSON, Aurora, Ontario, writes: "The Lancaster Watch has given the utmost satisfaction to my customers, and I have pronounced it a splendid time-keeper and first-class in every particular. I have examined and tested them thoroughly, and in my opinion, as a practical watchmaker, they are unequalled in their time-keeping qualities. They give more value for the money than any other American Watch I have ever handled."

HOME RECORD.

About January 1st, 1882, I purchased a "Melrose" Watch, No. 2,314, manufactured by the Lancaster Watch Company, and have worn the 15th day of July with a variation of only eight seconds in that time, compared with the time from Washington, having frequently compared the time between the dates above named. This would be at the rate of fifteen seconds variation to the year. J. B. LAWRENCE.

I hereby certify that I have carried a "Melrose" Watch, No. 2,324, manufactured by the Lancaster Watch Company, for more than one year, and that it has never varied thirty seconds from the time from the National Observatory at Washington. JACOB ROHL.

Walker St., Baltimore, Dec. 1881.

For six years I have been a great sufferer from Blood Disease, Dyspepsia, and constipation, and because so debilitated that I could not retain anything on my stomach, in fact, life had become almost a burden. Finally, when hope had almost left me, my husband seeing Brown's Iron Bitters advertised in the paper, induced me to give it a trial. I am now taking the third bottle and have not felt so well in six years as I do at the present time.
