SATUR JAY EVENING NOV. 11, 1882,

AUTUMN PLEASURES.

A liright l'icture of the Beauties of the Fall Lituz Record. It has often been remarked that there are people whom no kind of weather or no season of the year suits. To please such mortals when it rains it should be clear : when it is cold it should be warm, and when, if it could be both, it should be temperate, and then, with all this erraticainess, they would not be satisfied. How such persons live is a problem past finding

But one thing is plain : they fail to see, spread in lavish display, the beauties of that very nature at which they so continually gramble. Take, for instance, the present season of the year; how little they appreciate its glories, and yet what time in the whole twelve months is so rich with joy and beauty? The forests on mountains and in valleys are never so exquisite in color as they are now. The rare variegation of colors, the gorgerous presentation of a whole wood clothed in its autumn garb, and the pleasures incident to this time of the year are all lost on the dull sensibilities of these chronic fault But the present is a time of mirth and satisfaction to those who are rational encugh to edjoy it. The citizens of New York well remember this fact, because it is so rare to them; the citizens of Littez may torget it because it is so common to them. Let us commerate some of these delights. Who has not felt the blood tingle in his veins, his beart bound with gladness and his mind relieved of hurrasing cares when, upon a brisk, frosty morning, he joins a company of friends and takes a jaunt out among the gaudy woods and fruits of fall? There, as we see, amidst a glorious assemblage of gaudy trees, the red maple with its brown and orange, and the great dog wood bathed in its bright blood color, and countless othersclotte i in gold and crim son and yellow and blended tiuts, it seems as if all the glory and beauty of beaven had fallen on mother earth. And then, if the party is bent upon gathering the generous fruit of autums, what fun it is to climb high into the well-laden branches and shake the chest ints, the walnuts or the shell barks to the ground, and see the scared squirrel rush from the limbs and scamper away through the rustling leaves! Then, too, at this season there are doings about the firm-home rich in pleasure and benefit, There is the apple butter boiling, with its roaring fire, big kettle and long ladle, all surrounded by blushing lasses and sturdy lads, paring the red apples and slyly casting suggestive glances into happy eyes. And there, also, are corn husking parties, with beaps of golden ears piled here and there, while joyous voices drown the rustling of the lifeless stalk. Ah, a brave season of hilarity and contentment is the welcome autumn. It is a time when men and women mingle together and feel the purest joy. The wealth of the farmer is garnered in his barns, the toil and heat of the summer are over, and, safe with the unstinted gifts of nature, the homely, yet most unalloyed, enjoyments of the rural household are given full indulger ce, and all are bettered by their influence.
