DEMOCRATIC WISDOM.

CONGRESSIONAL REFORMS NEEDED.

By the Speaker Randall Upon the Issues of the Election. With Special Reference to the Tariff Question—A Hopeful Future. Philadelphia Times Interview.

Referring to the November elections Mr. Randall said: "I believe the recent Democratic and reform successes mean a declaration by the people in favor of a greatly reduced public expense, both in general and local government. Such reductions are easily attainable and can be secured without friction to proper administration. Republican control has led to extravagance in every respect and the people believe, as I believe, that those now in power are not equal to the accomplishment of such a result."

"There are many questions vital to the prosperity of the country," Mr. Randall proceeded to say, "that must be met, and among the number no one is of more importance than the doing away with the internal revenue system. As for myself, I am in favor of an absolute and entire repeal of all such taxation."

"Now let me tell you why. In the first place, the government does not need the money. The surplus revenue from all sources last year was about $15,000,000—within one million of the amount raised under the internal revenue laws—and surely, with economy, no difficulty can arise from such a change. Now for another reason: The internal taxes are offensive to the people as a mode of raising revenue in this country and have been substituted only as a necessity resulting from the war. The Republicans made a mistake in not co-operating with the Democrats at the last session of Congress in securing the then proposed reduction of $70,000,000. Now the whole system must go. "But that is not the end of this matter," continued the speaker, warming up visibly with his subject. "This system maintains four thousand people in office, who are kept by the nation at a cost of $5,000,000 a year. With the repeal of the service this burden will also be removed from the public shoulders."

Mr. Randall then proceeded to show how the government could raise the revenue necessary to merit its obligations and expenses. One prolific source of revenue was in the form of customs duties on imports. He thought a thorough reform and simplification of the tariff laws was necessary and should be effected as speedily as possible.

Discussing the tariff, with his well known energy, "The duties were enacted during war times and are not adapted to the existing conditions of our commerce and trade. I do not favor a tariff enacted upon the ground of protection simply for the sake of protection, because I don't see the extent of any constitutional warrant for any such construction, or the grant of any such power. It would manifestly be in the nature of class legislation, and to such legislation favoring one class at the expense of another I have always been opposed. In my judgment the question of free trade will not arise practically in this country during our lives, so long as we continue to raise revenue by duties on imports, and therefore the discussion of that principle is an absolute waste of time. After our public debt is paid in full, our expenditures can hardly be much below $200,000,000, and if this is levied in a business like and intelligent manner it will afford adequate provision to bear the burden of heavy taxation in the United States. The assertion that the constitution permits the levying of duties in favor of protection for the sake of protection is equally uncalculated for and unnecessary. Both are alike desultory and not involved in any other administrative policy. If brought to a test I believe neither would stand for a day. Protection for the sake of protection is prohibition, pure and simple, of importation, and if there be no importation there will be no duties collected and consequently no revenue, leaving the mercenary expenses of the government to be collected by direct taxes, for internal taxes would interfere with the protection principle, and when the people were generally asked to bear the burden of heavy taxation in the form of class legislation and the interests of a portion of our people at the expense of the great bulk of our population, there would be an emphatic and conclusive negative. So it is with free trade. There is now hardly a man in public life who advocates it pure and simple. Nobody wants direct taxation, although it would bring taxation so near and so constantly before the people that Congress would hesitate long to enact the sums of money it now does if not for improper at least for questionable purposes."

"What other measures of reform are likely to be effected by the Democratic party and how will their return to power affect the business interests of the country?" was asked.

"The need of Civil Service Reform. "The people are opposed to all subsidies and all kinds of jobbery," rejoined the ex-speaker. "Thorough reform in the civil service of the government is needed and the enactment of laws to prevent the enforced assessments on officials' salaries, whether such office-holders are under Federal, state or municipal control and authority. I think I can assure the public that nothing will be done by the Democratic House which will in any degree disturb or even embarrass our present business relations and prosperity, whether such may relate to commerce, manufactures or agriculture. Our experience and the lessons of our defeats and long absence from power will save the people and our party from such dangers."

By easy transitions the congressman got around to the subject of the Republican defeat in this state on Tuesday. He regarded the result of the election as a complete and final overthrow of bossism. The leaders of all parties and factions, he said, would do well to fully understand this feature of the result. When the subject of the speakership of the House of Representatives was broached by the reporter, Mr. Randall goodly humorously said: "No matter who is the speaker, the policy I have indicated will be executed as far as the Democrats in Congress can shape legislation. You can well understand," he said, in conclusion, "with such prospects ahead for the country and in my party I am in the best of hope for the future."

A GLORIOUS RECORD.

From Ben Butler's Boston Jubilee Speech. Why have the eyes of the people, not only of this state, but of the nation, turned to the Democratic party? For now more than a quarter of a century, so far as this state is concerned, its administration has been in the hands of one party. For more than a score of years the administration of the government has been in the hands of the same party. But for more than seventy years, with a few exceptions up to the time of the war, the administration of the government was in the hands of the Democratic party (great applause), and by that party's statesmanship it has contributed to the progress of the country and the extension of its territory, until the sun now rises and sets at the same hour upon the land of the United States. We had, first, under Jefferson, the acquisition of the Mississippi river, Louisiana and the great West, extending far up the Missouri and all its territory. That was opposed, you will remember, by the opposition party of that day. Who now would give up the Mississippi river, Missouri and the West to any power on earth? Next we took the little peninsula of Florida, acquired by the Democratic party. Next followed the empire state of Texas—that state more than a third larger in territory than the empire of France, and this day and this hour developing by the richness of its soil and the beauty of its climate into an empire which is destined to be divided directly into four states of this union, each greater in territory—two, and in the next decade in population—than the territory of New England. What next? Texas was acquired as early as 1844 or '45. It gave occasion to the war with Mexico, where the conquering arms of the republic, under the leadership of a Democratic administration, carried the glorious stars and stripes over the city of Mexico and all the Spanish dominions and Central America. [Applause.] Did we acquire anything by that administration? No. But we acquired the right to buy and pay for heavily and fearlessly the great empire of the Pacific coast, Arizona and New Mexico. These are the acquisitions of the Democratic party. These are the results of its statesmanship, the outcome of its principles. These are the secrets to which we point. By a change in politics, brought about by a question which, unhappily, brought war upon the country, the Democratic party were put in a minority, and for twenty odd years have been an opposition party for Democratic statesmanship to assert itself in the government of the country. It may be that it is not the time now to discuss it—it may have been the grievous fault of the Democracy, but grievously have we answered for it; and the fact that to the Democratic party we owe the unity, strength, power and glory of the country is the answer to that. [Applause.]

"And now the Republican party, composed of good, true, and honest men—for the masses of men are always honest and patriotic, to whatever party they belong—having conducted through its administration the war of the Union, and having settled with more or less wisdom, as the case may be, all the questions arising out of the war, attempt to hold the country by virtue of an organization against any sentiment for freedom and equal rights, and ending in almost a confederation of corruption. [Great applause.] When the country found itself in this condition where should it look for relief, for whom should it look for statesmanship, where should it look for reform, where should it look for all the qualities that brought this country up from an infant republic to a great nation? [Prolonged applause.] And they have turned to us. [Applause.] Let me say, in all frankness to you, they have turned to us largely, but with almost a doubting feeling: "Is the Democratic party equal to the task? It becomes our duty to teach the people that the sons are as the fathers were—equal to anything that conduces to the glory, honor and perpetuity of free institutions in this country. [Applause.] Let us, then, justify, so far as we may, deserve the confidence of the people which they have bestowed in us. [Applause.] Let every one of us, whether in the councils of the nation, wherein we now have an assumed majority, or in the councils of the state, where the majority is lacking and doubtful, show that we intend to so conduct ourselves that every man shall welcome the day when the Democratic party resumes the power which their principles demand they should have, which their statesmen show they know how to use, and that they, which have never been exercised except for the good of all men, and the equality of all men before the law. [Applause.] For myself—returning to you and to each one of you, again and again, thanks for your kindness, for your support, for your confidence—revere and pray the Almighty God to give me that virtue and wisdom and sagacity that shall lead me, in any sphere of official duty to which I may be called to do all that man can do to justify the confidence, the kindness, the love and protection shown me by the people of Massachusetts in the late demonstration which we have met to celebrate. [Prolonged applause.]

I suffered fearfully from indigestion, and for over two years could not eat solid food and for a large portion of the time was unable to retain even liquid nourishment.
