THE FALSE PROPHET.

MAS ME AT LAST TURNED UP?

The Long Looked for Iman Mahdi a Resident of Pennsylvania—An Old Story Retold in an Acceptable Style.

In the earlier part of the present century a large cargo of slaves direct from the Arabic speaking regions of Northern Africa, was secretly landed near Yorktown. This cargo was delivered to agents, and thus 800 intelligent Mohammedan light skinned Africans were distributed among the planters of Virginia. Fierce as untamed tigers, these wild followers of the Prophet of Mecca gave the slave owners more trouble than any other 800 bondsmen south of Mason and Dixon's line. Many of them escaped to the North, and their descendants live in Fayette county in this state. Among them are the Blues, Jacksons, Mundys, Palmers, Monoways, and others whose thin lips, high foreheads, aquiline noses, superior intellectual capacity and splendid physique distinguish them from fibrous negroes. A Philadelphia Times correspondent has found among these people the old home of the great false prophet of Soudan. His story is this: Among these escaped Mohammedans were George Johnson and wife. George's real name was Bayash El Asewah. He was a sleek and priest of the Order of Islam. For several years he lived in the mountains near Connelville, but, fearing recapture, went to Canada. In 1850 he returned to Pennsylvania and settled in Uniontown. In 1854 he removed to Brownsville, and subsequently to Pittsburg, where he died in 1871 at a very advanced age. In 1870, while at Connelville, his son Thomas was born. At the age of 10 Thomas had learned the Koran from his father. No turreted mosque raised its massive walls, no mosque Muezzin called the slaves and his family to worship, but Bayash El Asewah never forgot "There is but one God, and Mohammed is his Prophet," and in a land of Christian strangers secretly adhered to the faith of his fathers. In 1849 Thomas Johnson drifted to California, to return to Uniontown. Two years later, in 1853, he went to Paris and joined the French army. He was sent to Algiers at the close of his term of service. He joined a caravan and crossed Sahara toward the west coast of Africa. For several years he lived among the natives of that almost inaccessible region. With his almost perfect mastery of the Koran and his superior knowledge of the arts of civilization, and especially of war, he forged the front of a leader. He had heard of the war of the rebellion, fired with an ambition to help free the slaves of the South, he wrote a long letter to President Lincoln offering to recruit a thousand Arab zouaves for the Union army if the United States would transport him. The letter got into the newspapers, and was published as a great joke. In 1865 he returned, just as the war closed, and visited Connelville, Uniontown, Brownsville and Pittsburg, to see his aged father. In August he returned to Egypt, and thence to Soudan, where he acquired a great influence among the semi-civilized people of that extensive country, and claimed prophetic powers. As time rolled on his wealth and power increased, and when the English invaded Egypt he proclaimed himself Iman Mahdi, or the last prophet Allah shall send to conquer the enemies of Islam and rule supreme over the world. While Arabi Pasha was suffering defeat, rumor has it that the false prophet was achieving extraordinary victories and slaying thousands of his foes. According to Mohammedan belief Iman Mahdi is to come with great signs and wonders just before the judgment day. He will appear on a milk-white charger, accompanied by an innumerable army of bearded Mussulmans, all mounted on snow-white stallions. The Iman Mahdi must be a visible ruler, with power and respect in his side. If manumission is to spread the report that he is killing Jews, Christians and pagans by thousands, he may be accepted most willingly by the Moslems. The defeat of Arabi, who claimed to fight for the cause of Islam, may cause all Mohammedans to turn to Johnson as their coming prophet. It may be added that one of the False Prophet's hundred wives is a native of Fayette county, an octogenarian from Uniontown. She accompanied him to Mecca and to Africa in 1865, and is said to be the mistress of his harem. She, too, is a direct descendant of the Arabs of the slave ship of Yorktown. She still writes to her relatives in Pennsylvania.

DUELS AND DUELISTS.

In the Days of the French Brethren. One of the most interesting and curious of modern additions to the literature of dueling is afforded by M. Jules Claretie's Les Brethren. It is a story of the life of a man who formed at Bordeaux in the 1830 period, under the name of the Fraternite, for the sole purpose of exterminating the professional bullies and duelists—the brethren as they were called—who infested the place and made the lives of wives and mothers an unceasing anxiety. There are still brethren M. Claretie tells us; but as the more romanticists are but the shadow of the chevaliers of 1830, so is the modern brethren but a poor creature to those who practiced the coup du couteau. The first of these, known also, Mr. Claretie omits to state as the bottle do Nevers, consisted of fixing your point just between your adversary's eyebrows; the second took its name from the fact that the point severed the artery beneath the ear. M. Claretie goes on to tell a story of what befell one of these brethren who managed to pick a quarrel with an "honnête bourgeois" who occupied the same room with him at an inn. "We will fight to-morrow," said the duelist. "On the contrary, we will fight now," replied the bourgeois; and, attacking the bully with his fists, beat him into a mummy. "We will do this," he added, "as often as you like;" and the next day the knight of the foil left the town. Later on M. Claretie tells again the pleasing story of the duel between Sainte-Buvee and Dubois, of the Globe. Sainte-Buvee appeared upon the ground with a pistol of the time of Francis I., and holding an umbrella (it poured with rain) over his head. To all protestations he answered: "General Dubois has undertaken to kill me to-day. Very well, I am willing to be killed, but I will not get wet." As late as the days of Benjamin Constant, we find something like the conditions of editorial life in the West prevailing in Paris. Both Constant and a friend of his, a retired colonel who was a shareholder and collaborator in his paper, were weary of continual challenges and duels and set to work to find some one who should do the editorial fighting. Such a one was found in an old soldier, who had served under the colonel, and who said when the place was offered to him, that he must consult his wife. "You have a wife?" said the colonel. "Yes, sir; and three children." "In that case let us talk no more of it. I will find you something else to do." The soldier, however, when the colonel assumed to be a good fencer, insisted, his wife consented; and he took the place. Two duels came quickly upon him, and in both he was wounded, and thoroughly well looked after by Constant and the colonel, who showered presents upon his wife and children. A third duel came, and the colonel said, "Come, no child's play this time. One, two and down with your man." The old soldier was wounded again, and the colonel asked him, "What has happened to you Vincent? You're 'rieux de la vieillesse'—to be three times running worsted like this!" "Ah, mon colonel," Vincent replied, "what can you expect? I had nothing to do; I had a wife and three children; you offered me this place, which is well paid. I took it. But, as for fencing, I know nothing whatever about it." "Voilà cette fois," says M. Claretie, "du vrai courage," and he does not seem to be far wrong.

The club of the Fraternite, with which M. de Graves dealt, was founded in 1830 period in Bordeaux, and the things which led to its being founded were such things as these. The Comte de Larilliere, one of the well-born among the brethren, met one day in the street, a business man named Claretie, walking with his young and pretty wife. He advanced to him, and said, with a polite bow, "I beg your pardon, but I have made a bet with my friend here, whom I beg to introduce to you, that I would kiss your wife while she was walking with you here, the colonel's friend." Claretie, having given you a slap in the face." Claretie fought him next day with pistols. The count's first shot hit Claretie on the right ear, his second on the left. Before the third he said, "Cette fois je ferai mon coup," and with the third he shot Claretie through the eye. Claretie was avenged in a manner dramatic enough. One night as Larilliere sat in his favorite seat in a cafe, while a masked ball was going on hard by, a stranger in a domino mask came up to him, overturned his glass of punch, and ordered a glass of orgeat instead. Larilliere, for the first time in his life, turned pale and cried, "You scoundrel, you don't know who I am." "Oh yes," the stranger replied, "I know who you are, and I am quite well," and, with the words forced him down into the chair from which he had risen. The orgeat was brought, and the stranger, holding a pistol to Larilliere's head, said: "Unless you drink this off I shall blow your brains into the spot; if you think it off I will do you the honor of hitting you to-morrow." "With the sabre?" cried Larilliere who had lately been practicing with that arm. "How you like," said the stranger. Then as Larilliere drank of the orgeat he added, "I have humbled you enough tonight. I put off killing you until to-morrow." The morrow came, the adversaries met, and Larilliere found that he had met his match. The stranger left him not a moment's breathing space; but never followed up his attack until at last Larilliere cried insolently, "When are you going to kill me?" "Now," said the stranger, for the first time using his sabre like a duelling sword, and lunging straight toward Larilliere's heart. Masses were said in the churches of Bordeaux for this man, who kept his name secret, and who had rid the town of its scourge. This, however, was before the days of the Fraternite; and yet more terrible duels took place after the Fraternite was founded. One was between the two principal brethren of the place, and was a duel which began without witnesses in a bedroom, and was continued from time to time until Claveau, having deliberately killed his infamous friend and accomplice, and subsequently his enemy, the Duke of Liguano, in a pistol duel, ended his own career by suicide. In one of the duels with swords between them, Claveau, who had good reason for hating the marquis, made a faint at his breast and nailed his right foot to the ground with his sword.

Anybody can catch a cold now. The trouble is to let go the man who caught the bear. Johnson as their coming prophet. It may be added that one of the False Prophet's hundred wives is a native of Fayette county, an octogenarian from Uniontown. She accompanied him to Mecca and to Africa in 1865, and is said to be the mistress of his harem. She, too, is a direct descendant of the Arabs of the slave ship of Yorktown. She still writes to her relatives in Pennsylvania.

MEDICAL.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS.

Noted Men!

DR. JOHN F. HANCOCK, late President of the National Pharmaceutical Association of the United States, says: "Brown's Iron Bitters has a heavy sale, is conceded to be a fine tonic; the character of the manufacturers is a voucher for its purity and medicinal excellence."

DR. JOSEPH ROBERTS, President Baltimore Pharmaceutical College, says: "I endorse it as a fine medicine, reliable as a strengthening tonic, free from alcoholic poisons."

DR. J. FARIS MOORE, Ph. D. Professor of Pharmacy, Baltimore Pharmaceutical College, says: "Brown's Iron Bitters is a safe and reliable medicine, positively free from alcoholic poisons, and can be recommended as a tonic for use among those who oppose alcohol."

DR. EDWARD EMBICKSON, Secretary Baltimore College of Pharmacy, says: "I endorse it as an excellent medicine, a good digestive agent and non-intoxicant in the fullest sense."

DR. RICHARD SAFINGTON, one of Baltimore's oldest and most reliable physicians, says: "All who have used it praise its standard virtues, and the well-known character of the house which makes it a sufficient guarantee of its being all that is claimed for it, for they are men who could not be induced to utter anything else but a reliable medicine for public use."

A Druggist Cured.
Boonsboro, Md., Oct. 15, 1882. Gentlemen: Brown's Iron Bitters cured me of a bad attack of indigestion and fullness in the stomach. Having tested it, I take pleasure in recommending it to my customers, and am glad to say it gives entire satisfaction to all who use it.
GEO. W. HOFFMAN, Druggist.
