PRETTY WOMEN.

LANGTRY AND CONTEMPORARIES.

Some Beauties Before Her—Louisville Rav-ling Over An Actress—Mrs. Cornwallis-West's Painted Charms.

It is pretty certain that Mrs. Langtry by the advice of Manager Stetson and Mendum has given Mr. Fred Gebhart his conge in Boston. Mrs. Langtry had been accustomed during her brief experience on the stage in London to the English custom of permitting to the nobles and gentry the largest liberties in and about the theatres on the stage and in the green room, and she had no idea that American customs were different. So she, looking upon young Mr. Gebhart as the equivalent of a "joke" or "mark," at least, with his $50,000 a year, was quite content to accept his escort, and was disposed to invite him upon the stage. This part of the programme Mr. Stetson stopped, and Mr. Mendum, having explained to her how American customs did not sanction such indiscreet intimacies, she very sensibly and in the best of temper decided to break off the association, which, however innocent in itself, was capable of misinterpretation. It is probable that Mr. Gebhart was somewhat disgraced, but "he goes" all the same.

Mrs. Langtry's Predecessor.
Correspondence Boston Post.
Forty years ago England had another Mrs. Langtry—Madame Vestris. She was as lovely as she was liberal and attractive, two as she was desirable. She was the daughter of F. Bartolozzi, a royal scudemician, and just a little over the average height, of full and voluptuous figure, with a foot the symmetry of which was said to be unparalleled. It had been sculptured and plaster casts were on sale by Italian image boys in the streets. Her stage shoes, after being once worn, were bought at fabulous prices and used as drinking vessels by "blooms" of the time. Who Mrs. Vestris was, nobody seemed to know or care. The manager of the theatre to describe him as a tubulous bofer, who dodged about stage doors at treasury times, and levelled toll on madame's salary.

The Prettiest Woman in Paris.

The prettiest woman in Paris has returned to Paris. A lady who has been seen the fair and famous Mme. Bernakki, the celebrated Russian beauty, will know at once whom I mean without any further description. I saw her in her box at the opera the other night, looking the very type of perfect beauty and loveliness. Her features are remarkably like the portraits of Mme. Recamier. The eyes are of a deep, lovely blue, the nose aquiline, the mouth small and shaped like cupid's bow. The exquisitely-shaped head is set to perfection on the white, rounded throat, and the shoulders in a mold and in coloring would put to shame the most artistic form that was ever sculptured in marble. If her face were only expressive it would be divine. In her superb toilet of white satin the other night she was simply dazzling. She does not altogether understand how to set off her own marvellous beauty. She breaks the lines of her exquisite form by wearing great masses of flowers on her corsage, and she mars the outline of her shapely head by similar additions to her coiffure. It is said that she will next season one of the queens of Parisian society. Some incumberment which had weighed on her husband's estates will be removed and he will come into the possession of vast wealth which, joined to his wife's personal charms, will fully suffice to secure the position of the pair in the beau monde. I hope that some one of the great portrait painters of the day will, during the coming season, immortalize on canvas the face and form of this flesh-and-blood Venus.

A LOUISVILLE BEAUTY IN TROUBLE.

Two rival theatrical stars came tonight in their companies.

Louisville, that gave birth to the talent and beauty of Mary Anderson, and made her famous in a night, is always raving over some actress. During the past two weeks it has been Miss Estelle Clayton, who plays the part of "New Demand," "Emeralda." The whole city went into ecstasies about her beauty, and the theatre was crowded nightly with her admirers. Bouquets and passionate epistles were showered upon her, and her engagement was one which, joined to her wife's personal charms, will fully suffice to secure the position of the pair in the beau monde. I hope that some one of the great portrait painters of the day will, during the coming season, immortalize on canvas the face and form of this flesh-and-blood Venus.

Love Your Neighbor.

woman in England, but now—well, a woman's beauty can't last forever. Luckily for her, her position does not depend on her looks, like the others. Her husband, the Earl of Dudley, though as plain a looking man as you would meet in a day's walk, is one of the richest noblemen in the kingdom, and the combined forces of rank and money, which she has on her side, have enabled her to do what none of the others dared. Unlike the others, she has ever spared the notice and attention of the prince of Wales, going so far as to refuse to speak to him. Indeed, she has been known on more than one occasion to have deliberately turned her back upon him at a ball. She is a sister of the unfortunate Lady Mordaunt, which tells the whole story.

Mrs. Cornwallis-West has generally, in a popular sense, counted number two among the popular beauties. Some people there are who think her the prettier of the two. But her figure, though undoubtedly a fine one, does not approach that of the Jersey Lily, and her face at public entertainments is too elaborately embellished with bismuth and rouge to allow it a moment's place of comparison beside the purely natural, untouched-by-art complexion of other women. I was at a country ball last winter near Healey, and late in the evening a large party arrived from some house in the neighborhood where they were staying. Among them was Mrs. Cornwallis-West. Strange as it may appear, I had never seen her before. But until I was told who she was, I had supposed that it was some opera bouffe actress who had got into the place by mistake, she was so painted and powdered over cheek, arched and neck; her eyes were so picked out with belladonna, her complexion was so flawless, her voice was so loud and boisterous, and her poses and her gestures had such a decided smack of the heroines of Offenbach and Leocoe. On her bodice just over her heart she wore a large gold padlock. This she informed some young man who inquired its meaning, was the lock to the entrance of her love, adding, with a glance worthy of Schneider in her best days, that even her husband had not the key. Major Cornwallis-West, the man who occupies that unenviable position, is a gentleman of considerable private means, arising from large landed and mineral interests in Wales. In favorable comparison with Mr. Langtry he goes about with his wife, and their names are frequently mentioned together. In short, he does not believe in chaperones. Of another type altogether is Lady Lonsdale, or Gladys, countess of Lonsdale, as the death of her husband and the consequent step down to dowagerhood now compels her to be called. Tall, dark and stately, she has been known out of his teens, but he was the possessor of $100,000 a year, and estates so vast that even his reckless extravagance and dissipation had not appreciably diminished them. Once she was married, the gypsy-like beauty did pretty well as she lived out her days, while her husband, who had several titled young guardsmen, who have lately seen service in Egypt, causing more than one scandal in his life. She was always somewhere abroad during her husband's last illness, and had to be actually summoned home to be present at his death bed.

As a widow, she does not appear to have altered in the least. She has a house down near Windsor at which she now and then entertains the Prince of Wales, she has the late earl's valuable collection of pictures, and she has the control of what was settled on her three-year-old daughter; so she doesn't want for money to do whatever she likes. She is to be one of the party who are going with Lord Charles Bedford and his wife for a tour through India. Of course it is her rank that smooths over whatever she may do. But were she a plain "Mrs.," with no blood in her veins traceable through the "gipsy" lineage of Burke and De Brest, it would be all the other way.

Wanamaker's.

Silk novelties innumerable and indescribable. Everything that ladies or dressmakers have occasion for in matching, decorating, combining. What we are remarkable for, more than for anything else in silks, is variety; or, at least, we are reputed so. You hear it said by everybody: "If you want to match anything, or find a rare silk, even an unexpected one, go to Wanamaker's."

The other peculiarity that everybody expects to find here is less pleasant to speak of; lower prices. We put it second, because there are people who don't credit us with lower prices. Still, we imagine that if one should assert the contrary, almost everybody in Philadelphia would believe it.

Often we speak of other aspects of our trade; aspects less obvious or less recognized. It is well occasionally to give old news.

Next-door circle, south entrance to main building.

Warm skirts for ladies, and leggings for ladies, girls and little girls. The warm skirts are satin, satin-and-cloth, satin-and-felt, satin-and-Italian-cloth, and Italian, all quilted; cloth, flannel and felt prettily trimmed, not quilted, warm enough without. The leggings are all sorts; one very useful and fairly pretty sort, woven, at two-thirds value, 25 to 65 cents.

West of south entrance to main building.

Furs have to be thought of. We're busy enough as to making. If we advertise at all, we ought to say what will not oppress us with too much making. Perhaps this is. A great many seal coats and fur-lined circulars are ready-made. More sizes are ready-made here than anybody expects; especially the unexpected sizes
