INGERSOLL ANSWERED.

THE FINE ELOQUENCE OF A PRIEST.

The Infidel Orator Meets His Match in Beautiful Rhetoric—An Opponent Who Uses His Own Weapons. Philadelphia Record.

No one who has ever heard Robert Ingersoll's lecture will deny that he is a rare orator. His word-painting is wonderful, his eloquence entrancing. Thus far in his crusade against Christianity he has met a giant in the eyes of his followers—a giant against whom he has encountered an adversary, however, seemingly in every way his equal, even in his own peculiarities of rhetoric, to judge from the following extract from a sermon delivered on last Sunday, on the occasion of the dedication of the Church of the Annunciation at Kansas City, Mo., by Rev. Father Dax. The priest, St. Louis, well known as the editor of the "Western Watchman." Having asserted that "the idea of the soul and the faith in its immortality must have come down from above, as earth could not have taught it, a reverend father said:

"If there is no hereafter, then life is one long debauch, and the highest education is to know how to find and how best to enjoy pleasure. If there is no hereafter, virtue is a deceit and heroism is a lie. See that young man bleeding from a hundred wounds. He died in defense of a sister's honor. If there is no hereafter, that noblest of deeds will go forever unrewarded. See that young sister in the hospital bending over a victim of the plague; to-morrow she will succumb, and a rapid and hasty sepulture will reward her devotion. If there is no hereafter, her charity met a sorry requital. See that man holding an afflicted child at the window of a burning building. He holds it long enough for a sturdy bonanza to grab it from below, and he falls back into his fiery tomb. If there is no hereafter, such sacrifice is heartless and in meaning cruelty. See that troop of soldiers marching by to the beating of the drum. Their country has called, and they go to defend her honor on the battlefield. They follow that flag into the thick of the fight, and when the bugle sounds the retreat few return from the carnage. Those brave soldiers died with their face to the foe, and a smile was stamped on their features in death. If there is no hereafter, their heroism was suicide and their courage a mockery of fate. Earthly life is closed in death; the grave terminates all consort and association with things of time, but, wafted above the pier, the wreck, the tomb, floats the sweet voice of God, saying: 'I am the life.'"

Contrast the above with the pronounced leprosy of the Standard's editor, the handsome and beautiful and tender as in the language of the infidel orator, that of Father Phelan loses nothing by the comparison: "Next to eternal joy; next to being forever with those we love and those who have loved us; next to that is to be banished in the dreamlike drapery of eternal death. Upon the shadowy shore of death the sea of trouble casts no wave. Eyes that have been tortured by the everlasting dark will never know again the touch of tears. Lips that have been touched by the eternal silence will never utter another word of grief. Friends of dust do not break. The dead do not weep."

The Kansas City Journal publishing the sermon, says that its subject matter was only equalled by the grace and charm of its handling. It is hardly likely that Mr. Ingersoll will attempt to ridicule this Catholic priest, as he has so many assumed defenders of the Christian faith. Father Phelan is apparently a different adversary from some of the pulpit mountebanks Mr. Ingersoll has encountered, whose dry dog sentences and impudic logic do more to injure the cause of religion than even Mr. Ingersoll's insidious and eloquent periods. Father Phelan is master of the weapons Mr. Ingersoll uses, and the infidel orator must cast prudence from his own dish in an encounter with this Knight of the Cross.

A MESSENGER BOY'S FORTUNE.

Outfitting the Standard Oil Company and Standard Oil Company, $10,000. Cincinnati Inquirer.

The Standard Oil Company, the only concern in the world that is powerful enough to compel the combined trunk line railroads to do its bidding, demanding and receiving from them rates which made impossible an investment and created a rivalry, has lately been beaten by a messenger boy. In the history of the Standard this is the only time it has ever been outwitted. Tom Scott, when alive and president of the Pennsylvania railroad, was outgeneraled by the Standard. Vanderbilt and his allies were not a match for Rockefeller, and they were compelled to allow him rebates which enabled him to build up the greatest monopoly the world has ever known. When he got ready he laid a pipe line of his own from the oil regions to Cleveland in one direction, and from the oil regions to the seaboard in another direction, and then to the trunk line managers who had enriched him that they could go to that place where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched.

But this man with his millions has been outwitted by Mike Keating, 16 years old, a messenger boy of the Western Union telegraph company at Oil City. Mike has been in the employ of the telegraph company since he was old enough to carry dispatches, and nearly all of this time he has been in the oil exchange at Oil City, carrying messages to and from the brokers. The large operators in petroleum send their dispatches in cipher. The boy had carried so many messages sent by the Standard from its headquarters at Cleveland that he had unraveled the mystic characters and could read them like a printed page. Just prior to the recent extraordinary advance in the petroleum market, when the price jumped in a few days from fifty cents to $1.35, Keating carried a number of telegrams to the Standard's brokers, ordering them to buy large blocks of oil. The monopoly had laid its plans to boom the market and its Oil City brokers were ordered to buy everything. "Buy half a million barrels," "buy a million barrels," "buy two million barrels," were the way these orders came in. They were riddles to all but the brokers who received them and Mike Keating, the messenger boy, who delivered them.

Keating, although a mere boy, knew something extraordinary was soon to happen. The market, which had been like a stagnant pool for a year, was already creeping up the scale. Orders for immense blocks of oil were still coming from the Standard's headquarters. There was no time to lose. But what could a boy do without a dollar in his pocket? Keating went to one of the largest operators on the floor of the exchange, outside of the Standard's agents, and told him he had a "pointer." The broker laughed at him. The boy's earnestness finally commanded attention and the broker agreed to his proposition, which was that Keating should furnish money for a "deal," if he was satisfied with the information, and divide the profits equally. Then the messenger told the broker what he had and of the telegrams he had been carrying from the Standard's Cleveland office. The next message that fell into the boy's hands was carried secretly to the broker and translated. It was an order to buy everything that was offered. The broker probably swallowed to keep his heart down; anyway, he went back to the exchange and began to buy. He saw the Standard's agents buying right and left and was satisfied a big deal was in progress. He took everything he could get until he had a round million barrels. The market was already jumping fast and his million barrels had been secured at an average price of 72 cents. He was loaded to the guards. Orders to buy and orders to sell were pouring in from every quarter and the excitement was becoming intense. The market was still bounding upward, with the usual fluctuations. Every time the price advanced a cent or declined a cent the broker saw a profit or a loss of $10,000. He kept his head, however, and when the market scored above 80 cents he began to unload. The Standard men were on hand to take everything, and he got rid of all his oil at an average price of 80 cents a barrel. He had bought at 72 and his profits were therefore eight cents a barrel or $80,000 in all. He divided equally with Mike Keating, the messenger boy. The market unraveled the Standard's cipher, according to agreement. It is well enough to remember that oil touched $1.25 during the ten days' spurt, and if the broker had held on until the top was reached the profits of the two would have been $639,000. It goes without saying that the Standard Oil Company has a new cipher and one messenger boy is out of a job.

In the Wrong Dress. A large crowd was drawn together on South Second street, Philadelphia, Sunday evening by the stragglings of a drunken German who, with a lace-fringed petticoat about his waist and an old straw thrown in graceful negligence about his shoulders, a la Jeff Davis, was wandering aimlessly about. He was arrested at Second and German streets and taken to the second district station house, where he gave the name of Frederick Wagener, aged twenty, and living at Ninth and German streets. Frederick, who could speak very little English, was unable to explain how he came to be thus strangely apparelled; and wept bitterly over his arrest. It is supposed that he had been confined in some of the numerous dens of the neighborhood, and that the inmates taking his coat as an equivalent, had put the other articles upon him and sent him forth for their own amusement. The police removed the petticoat and Wagener spent the night in a cell.

Epidemic Development. A case of what is pronounced "genuine leprosy" has been developed in the almshouse at Salem, Massachusetts. The patient, Charles Derby, arrived from San Francisco a week ago.

An actor at the Theatre Comique, in Minneapolis, was taken sick last Monday, and on Saturday the city physician pronounced his disease the small pox. The theatre was at once closed, and the actors and employes, 45 in number, were placed under quarantine restrictions.

A

Wanamaker's.

Silk novelties innumerable and indescribable. Everything that ladies or dressmakers have occasion for in matching, decorating, combining. What we are remarkable for, more than for anything else in silks, is variety; or, at least, we are reputed so. You hear it said by everybody: "If you want to match anything, or find a rare silk, even an unexpected one, go to Wanamaker's."

The other peculiarity that everybody expects to find here is less pleasant to speak of; lower prices. We put it second, because there are people who don't credit us with lower prices. Still, we imagine that if one should assert the contrary, almost everybody in Philadelphia would believe it.

Often we speak of other aspects of our trade; aspects less obvious or less respected. It is well occasionally to give old news.

Warm skirts for ladies, and leggings for ladies, girls and little girls. The warm skirts are satin, satin-and-cloth, satin-and-felt, satin-and-Italian-cloth, and Italian, all quilted; cloth, flannel and felt quilted; trimmed, not quilted, warm enough without. The leggings are all sorts; one very useful and fairly pretty sort, woven, at two-thirds value, 25 to 65 cents.

West of south entrance to main building.

Furs have to be thought of. We're busy enough as to making. If we advertise at all, we ought to say what will not oppress us with too much making. Perhaps this is. A great many seal coats and fur-lined circulars are ready-made. More sizes are ready-made here than anybody expects; especially the unexpected sizes. Ready-made work we can make in July. Why shouldn't we make all the shapes and sizes ready-made? 1263 Chestnut.

Black satin rhademaes and satin de Lyons, 25 to 35 cents below our own recent prices, of all grades from $1 to $2; and we guess our prices haven't been very high; have they?

West-center circle, south entrance to main building.

Wool serge embroidered with silk dots that ought to sell for $1.50—no that isn't the way to put it; it ought to sell according to our theory, for just as little as we can afford; and that is 75 cents.

Look out for such now. It's time for over-buying and all sorts of mistakes to show themselves. We try to keep ready to turn other folk's mistakes to account for ourselves and for you.

Third circle, southeast from centre.
