NOT TELEGRAPHED.

GOOD NEWS THAT'S NEVER SEEN.

A Timely Reflection on the Many Good Things That We Ordinarily Make No Account Of.

The transmission of news is defective in one point. Embellishments, murders, disasters by fire and flood, suicides, unfaithfulness in domestic or financial affairs, the marauding of the sea and the burglar who breaks in, the trains that are "derailed," the whole array of disconcerting events that the twenty-four hours make public property are all marked to be sent over by the telegraph. The "intelligence" from places near and remote, as though they were the persistent and main events in human affairs. The future historian who should go only by old news paper files to arrive at an estimate of this country at this date, without other sources of enlightenment, would conclude that we were all very prosperous, but morally in a very bad way. All these tricks and thefts, dishonors, disasters and crimes, on the contrary, bear about the same relation to the course of affairs as a burnt finger, a face ache, or a touch of indigestion do to the sound, healthy days of a good constitution. A man notes his occasional symptoms and tells them over to his doctor, because they are exceptions that force themselves to his notice. He never sets down nor pauses to consider the whole of his life in which there is nothing whatever the matter, nor the healthy symptoms of being buoyant and free, and when everything goes well. Health is the rule and malaise the exception for the fifty millions of people this country over, and so it is with events. The exception alone called to notice.

Just at this time, when embellishments have been turning up in disconcerting succession, nobody telegraphs and nobody notices the huge credit rolls on the other side. Think, for a moment, of all the banks, trust companies, savings banks and building societies, the public and private accountants all over the country that are making up at this time their honest and true balances. Think of the hundreds of thousands of officers and clerks handling other people's money, entrusted with other people's fortunes, with confidence as delicate as they are weighty, faithfully balancing their books in this last week of the year. Nobody takes any account of this grand army; of this fidelity, which is legion. Upon the smooth, powerful wheels of this business, this machinery, nobody takes account of because it is so uniform—in its integrity so noiseless—the defaulters and thieves that come into notoriety are as floating chips and straws. They are seen, they are noted, they are caught, they are surrounded, and even bearing them up into notice. There should be an immense satisfaction in thinking of the integrity, the ability, the exact honor and probity that temptations never come near; all the vast and quiet energy that at all moments is checking off over counters and columns the year's return of trusts. They represent the health of business, and have no symptoms to notice but the regular pulse and trusty circulation. So with the mechanics and manufacturers, the thousands whose word is as good as their bond; the many thousands of the honorable men, for every one who goes astray; the platoon who in prosperous or unprosperous years redeem their pledges; the solid and reputable men who are called upon to do anything for the good, but who like to keep their names out of print and "dodge" the interviewer. One rogue who gets goods under false pretenses and goes bankrupt after getting rid of them, is telegraphed as an embezzler; another, who swears that their heads over the growing depravity of the times.

The Shepherd's Fold starves the babies, and among political-poor guardians beef and milk and blankets are stinked and short shivering papers. As against these few instances we have all which the country countless private charities, under the charge of good women and men, who manage their trusts with greater thrift and care than they give to their own household expenditures. It is not only Charles Kingsley who has acted up to the fact he dashed off for his friend Tom Hughes, which were summed up as the line of life that he felt nearest to him, "Helping lame dogs over stiles." The helpfulness towards persons who have no claim, just the patient dumb, crippled and shipwrecked folks, that have labored before some gate they cannot pass, the hands that speed these along in silent and daily response—who ever stops to number them? There are more tramps in life than the police ever know; more desperation that is saved, more suffering that is relieved, more need than the newspapers could ever show if they devoted half of every day's issue to the work.

It is impossible, from the nature of things, that the dew should have its record every night, and even when it gets a temporary illumination as frost in the morning, it vanishes when the sun is up.

THE RICHEST DENTIST IN THE WORLD How the American Doctor Evans Gained His Wealth and Honor.

Dr. Evans hails from Philadelphia. He is of Welsh extraction, and belongs to a family half Quaker, half Methodist, who were well-respected folks in the city founded by Penn.

Dr. Evans became a dentist, and took a wife when he was a very young man. He then came to Europe to assist his countryman, Brewster, who had been asked to look after the teeth of the prince president, and had more business than he could well attend to. Evans was an extremely handsome and well-made little man. His features, though large, were so neatly cut as almost to give him a pretty character. An English tailor dressed him in the best style. He always in the daytime looked the man of business although it was easy to see that he was used to rub shoulders with the foremost personages of the world.

A tincture of American independence ran through his quiet manner. In smiling, he showed, as if unintentionally—and it may have been sans intention—a white and even set of teeth. A small and nicely shaped hand manipulated instruments of torture with firm dexterity. There was genuine kindness in the manner, and there was something in the face which expressed an obliging disposition. Soon after the coup d'etat, Brewster sold his business to Dr. T. Evans. It included a virtual monopoly of court practice, which, as the new emperor was omnipotent, soon brought a throng of patients to the office at the Rue de la Paix. The emperor, who hated Jews, and dreaded being like Horace and Josephine, his mother and grandmother, irrationally toothless, liked his dentist's quiet and civil way of discharging his morning duties.

The doctor attended daily, when in Paris, at 8 A. M., at the emperor's toilet, and then proceeded to the dressing room of the emperor. Eugene spoke French with facility, but never like a well-educated Parisienne. She knew that she was often mentally criticized by members of her entourage for her inelegant locations. It was, therefore, agreeable to her to chat in English—a tongue of which she was quite mistress—with Evans, who retailed to her the news of the town and the current gossip about the court, with an amount of truthfulness that was refreshing to ears tired of flattery. He also treated her teeth as if they were pearls of great price, and kept them for seventeen years in excellent condition.

Napoleon III. was, on the throne, unable to give up his Carbouari habits, which were seen through. For instance, when the Czar had a bad tooth and sent for Evans, Bismarck, King Leopold, and the Queen of Holland, Prince Metternich, and Nigra were on the alert to find out what was brewing at St. Petersburg. The fortunate dentist accordingly was summoned to attend in many capitals to royal teeth. Unwittingly he made revelations, the importance of which he did not see. He was given diamond-studded snuff boxes, rings, pins, and valuable furs.

Condescension was in many an instance pushed so far as to send him the likeness of a royal or imperial patient, executed expressly for him. The empress (then queen) Augusta did not go so far as this; but she gave the doctor two superb Dresden vases, with painted views on them of her Potsdam Schloss and Schonhausen. The doctor has every kind of decoration except the insignia of the English and Prussian orders and the Golden Fleece.

Under the empire, Dr. Evans remained a citizen of the United States. He is very American in feeling. During the civil war he went in strongly for the North. Thurlow Weed, to counteract the influence of Sillwell and his charming daughters, took care to secure the co-operation of the "Tuleries" of Evans. The dentist had a Quaker dislike to slavery. He knew how to please the emperor, whose resolution he increased when the court set, interested in the Jecker affair, wanted the blockade of the Southern ports to be broken.

Evans was the only familiar of the imperial entourage who spoke of brave and chivalrous manner on the fourth of September. The empress was deserted by all the grand members of the household and the high functionaries. Even her cousin, M. de Lesseps, who had often professed good counsel, which was not heeded, but who owed the success of the Suez canal to her, did not remain at her side. In her desolation she thought, when on quitting the Tuileries the Italian minister put her and Mure Labretton into a cab, of driving to the house of Dr. Evans. The idea was a happy one. Her majesty arrived in her dressing gown. Mrs. Evans was at the bedside; the doctor was out.

When he returned he saw the fugitive had not been recognized, and treated her as if she had been driven by an aching tooth to call upon him at his private residence. The looks of his wife's clothes pressed were forced to obtain a change of raiment for the empress, who with her lady, was taken by the doctor in his own carriage to the Norman coast. A good friend in adversity to the imperial couple, Evans had, when they were triumphant, the courage to give them wholesome but unpalatable advice. Knowing thoroughly the organization of the Prussian army, he again and again warned the emperor and empress that in going to war with Germany they would court ruin. The empress probably remembered this advice when she was sitting in his house awaiting his return home.

Hold on to the truth, for it will serve you all the better in the long run. Hold on to virtue, it is beyond price to you at all times and places. Hold on to Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, for there is nothing like it to cure a cough or cold.

"Better be wise by the misadventures of others than by your own." Take warning in time. Avoid quack nostrums by which thousands annually perish. Use only such remedies as are demonstrated above suspicion. Beware of the "miraculous" cures of the quack. Beware of the "miraculous" cures of the quack. Beware of the "miraculous" cures of the quack.

DRY GOODS.

Wanamaker's.

Silk novelties innumerable and indescribable. Everything that ladies or dressmakers have occasion for in matching, decorating, combining. What we are remarkable for, more than for anything else in silks, is variety; or, at least, we are reputed so. You hear it said by everybody: "If you want to match anything, or find a rare silk, even an unexpected one, go to Wanamaker's."

The other peculiarity that everybody expects to find here is less pleasant to speak of; lower prices. We put it second, because there are people who don't credit us with lower prices. Still, we imagine that if one should assert the contrary, almost everybody in Philadelphia would believe it.

Often we speak of other aspects of our trade; aspects less obvious or less recognized. It is well occasionally to give old news.

Warm skirts for ladies, and leggings for ladies, girls and little girls. The warm skirts are satin, satin-and-cloth, satin-and-felt, satin-and-Italian-cloth, and Italian, all quilted; cloth, flannel and felt prettily trimmed, not quilted, warm enough without. The leggings are all sorts; one very useful and fairly pretty sort, woven, at two-thirds value, 25 to 65 cents.

Furs have to be thought of. We're busy enough as it making. If we advertise at all, we ought to say what will not oppress us with too much making. Perhaps this is. A great many seal coats and fur-lined circulars are ready-made. More sizes are ready-made here than anybody expects; especially the unexpected sizes. Ready-made work we can make in July. Why shouldn't we make all the shapes and sizes ready-made?

Black satin rhademaes and satin de Lyons, 25 to 35 cents below our own recent prices, of all grades from $1 to $2; and we guess our prices haven't been very high; have they?

Wool serge embroidered with silk dots that ought to sell for $1.50—no that isn't the way to put it; it ought to sell according to our theory, for just as little as we can afford; and that is 75 cents.

Look out for such now. It's time for over-buying and all sorts of mistakes to show themselves. We try to keep ready to turn other folk's mistakes to account for ourselves and for you.
