THURSDAY FVENING DEC. 28, 1882 THE YWO WOOINGS. In a garden sweet with roses, Mused a maid one summer day, Dreaming 'mid the bloom and fragrance of the years long passed away. "In this very garden olden, I have heard my mother say, Did my grandsire, proud and stately, Woo a maiden fair and gay. Gay and fair, my girlish grand-dame

(I have seen her pictured face), Pure and sweet as any lily, With a dainty, old-time grace. He, so tall and grand and stately, Powdered hair and quaint attire Yet beneath the garb of manhood Beat a heart of youthful fire.

And he woodd in courtly phrases, Murmured low on bended knee, Like a true and loving subject-Like a royal princess she. fe tree he dared, with humble fervor, Press her dainty finger-tips;

Lower bent his head, and lower, When he raised them to his lips. Ah, so grand that old-time woolng, Timid glance and bended knee !" "Thus" (so ran her gentle musings) "Must my lover kneel to me." In the garden as she lingered; Dreaming dreams as maidens will.

Down the leafy walks there sounded Steps that made her pulses thrill. And a youth of modern aspect, With a manner debonnair,

Came with words of careless greeting, Sought the nearest garden chair. And he chatted of the weather, Praised the garden, plucked a rose : Likened it to her in beauty-Fairest, sweetest flower that grows. Not a trace of awe or homage

On his frank and happy face; Yet the maiden read his purpose 'Neath his mien of careless grace. "Oh, his heart is true and tender! Sweet the tale he has to tell! And" (so ran her happy musing) "Sure am I he loves me well."

Does he kneel, this modern lover Press her dainty finger tips ? All ! instead he clasps her closely, Boldly kissing willing lips; Eagerly, with eyes love-lighted, Gazes on her blushing face ; Calls her dearest, best and fairest, Praises every tender grace. " Stately was my grandsire's wooing, On that olden summer day! Yet " (thus ran her guileless musing)

"Sweeter far the modern way." -Ada E. Rockwell in Century. SEPTEMBER 14, 1881.

AFTER CHRISTMAS

The end of the business year has come, and we thank a generous public for its many favors. When looking back upon the general result we must confess that it has been a grand success, which convinces us that our customers thoroughly appreciate our effort to procure for them the very best articles the largest market can afford at prices that are the very lowest. We shall endeavor to extend our business, and by rapidity of sales keep our stock in the freshest condition; and by frankness in dealing hold the implicit confidence of the people, as our business the past year proves by the success we have attained. All who have purchased of us have done so fully convinced they have furthered their own interest by the transaction. To those who still need a good
