'lis joys that you are giving. Ah! weil I know, as back you go, The bright spots you have darkened The siren song, that led me wrong, And still I weakly harkened; Your fickle smile, that could begulie

My truest aspirations; Your miden's eye, lit with a lie, To leat my expectations. But ha! old year, I still am here,

You see that I outlive you! There! on your head the coals are red, For, bless you, I forgive you! You had some good; no doubt I stood To make my own life shadow; Perhaps my power was thorn or flower,

A desert, or a meadow. No more I'll mourn for hopes dead-born, For lights that gleamed to fool me; Red lips, bright eyes, no more l'il prize, They'll only serve to school me. No more in air shall castles rare Re built with wondrous beauty : No dreams, al strife, my future life

Shall be a solemn duty. I'll blow away the ashes gray Upon my heart's true altar, Lit is tex clear there, see him bleed, An inever turn or falter.

And abile the fire shall reach up higher, Move ! by divine life-leaven I'll grow as bold as he of old, And woo a spark from heaven! I'll have to take a wizard rake.

And bring my past together; That smile, that tear, that song so clear, This dry spray from the heather, That happy hour that brought this flower-Ah! could it ever laste!!

But time on rushed, a heart was crushed, Love's brightest bloom was blasted Those letters and rings and all the bright things

That I have learned to cherish: The visions I had, or joyful or sad, The hopes that lived to perish, when all are found and deep in the ground Are buried from light forever.
