CHRISTIAN MARRIAGE. HISTORY OF THE INSTITUTION. Tracing Back the Origin and Growth of a Familiar Social Custom and Religious Rite. Baitimore Day.

Though English marriage was one of the earliest achievements of civilization. it is not one so old that one cannot look beyond it to a period in which no wedlock worth of the name of matrimony existed. In following its strictly national uses to their sources the epoch is reached in the history of womankind when every man's title to his conjugal partner rested on barbarous violence, and society countenanced no matrimonial fites save those that license authorized and physical strength performed. This earliest system of wedlock, by which a man obtained a wife by the exercise of his recognized right to capture her, was not properly extinguished till a much later perion than the sixth century. For at this time, through the sordid practices of marriage by purchase had become general, Ethelbert framed a law which recognized in a significant manner the privileges of the older method-capture. "If a man," the statute reads, ' carry oft a maid by force he should pay tifty shillings to her owner and afterward buy her from him"-the husband's title to

In searching for some of the rites incidental to a marriage by capture, clerical interference is nowhere discernible. But it is not without interest to note in passing that there are some writers who maintain that our matrimonial usages abound with the traces of violence anciently employed for the capture of brides. Indeed, there is searcely a thing employed or a custom observed in solemnization of mat rimony which they do not construe as a vestige of the obsolete use of force. The 'best man" is nothing but the warrior who fought the pursuers of the captured hurled in futile rage by outstripped relatives at the retreating bridegroom. The ill feeling that sometimes is said to arise Does a hane back or disordered mine indi-te that you are a victim." THEN 100 NOT ESITATE ; use Kidney-Wort at once (drug-st- recommend it) and it will specifily over-me the disease and restore healthy action. However true these analogies between husbands and their mothers inmay be, in many parts of Wales, Ireland and the north of Scotland the customs of marriage by capture were preserved with a remarkable fidelity to former universal practices Writing so late as 1802 Samp son says of the matrimonial fashions of the Irish mountaineers : "However suit-

Dr. Marquis, of the Lafayette softened by the substitution of Christian Park Presbyterian church, St. Louis, did ccremonies and saints for the festivals and not wear the Genevan robe in his pulpit divinities of the pagan. This accomplished, Christianity taught, last Sunday, two members of his church having gone to him, and, as he publicly as a religious dogma, that all forms of insaid in the kindest, tenderest manner, contercourse of the sexes other than lifelong vinced him that their spiritual comfort unioas were criminal. By the inflexible had been disturbed by his wearing the teaching of this dogmatism the purely gown. Regarding it, therefore, as a civil marriage of the later pagan empire mere personal taste, he, in deference to was gradually replaced by religious mar-riages. There is multiful propulety in what he believed to be the conscientious scruples of these persons, cheerfully sur invoking a divine benediction upon an act rendered his own preferences. which forms so important an epoch in The Rev. Dr. Potter, in accepting the life, and a mingling of a religious cereculi to the Dudley street Baptist church, Boston, wrote : ' I have heard no divine mony impresses a d eper sense of the solemnity of the contract. Thus it was with Rome. 1wdeod&w -----Christianity reached the Anglo-Saxons at a time when marriage by purchase had o come general, when woman was regarded as a mere "thing" and could be bought and sold as any other chattel. This was, as has been shown in the sixth century. And when the church, in the discharge of her salutary functions toward domestic interests, undertook the control of marriage as a department of social life clearly lying under the province of sacerdotal duty, marriage under the elergy only gradually came to be looked upon as abso lutely necessary. For historians declare that the custom of joining lovers in wedlock at the jorch or door of the church Queen street. arose in the Norman period of English histers, about 500 years after the introduction of Christianity by Augustine A. D. 597, and that marriages were not celebrated in the church before the last year of the undue jealousy of sacerdotal interference with secular contract. The action of the Angle-Saxon church in regulating betrothals and looking after the interests of married women shows even more forcibly that social opinion was disposed to regard matrimony as falling within the province of clerical influence. Under these circumstances it seems probable that the customs of the porch which existed in Norman England may have been general, if not universal, before the conquest.

After prevailing for centuries this an cient usage of marrying before the porch was actually abolished by the ecclesiastical reformers of Edward VI.'s reign, who ordained that the performance of the binding ceremony should take place in the body of the church. Under Mary it was, of course, universally resumed, together with other religious practices forbidden by Protestantism. It fell into disuse in her reign, and was never more revived in England. In France, however, it provailed much later, as is shown by Charles l.'s marriage (by proxy) with Henrietta Maria at the Notre Dame, By the ancient common law of England mere consent was enough to constitute marriage. And though the clergy did their utmost to divert attention from the proofs of the secular origin of marriage, they never succeeded in making the intelligent laymen forget that matrimony was an institution that had risen out of common law long before the pope and prelate took it under their protection. The secular legislation for the suppression of uncanonical matrimony began with the enactment of William and Mary, A. D. 1694, entitled ' an act for granting several duties, etc., oward carrying on the war with France. By this means money was to be raised by llegalizing all other marriages save that performed by the established church. By ford Hardwick's act in 1757 a ceremony in an established church was made neces sary, and this continued until 1836, when the dissenters succeeded in removing the exclusive less.
