FEW WORDS ABOUT

We take pleasure in calling the attention of the public to our Large Assortment of CHILDREN'S CARRIAGES. As these goods have been made to our own special order, we feel safe in saying that in Durability of Construction, Elegance of Finish or Beauty of Design, they are ahead of any goods in the market. The styles this season are more varied than ever. The finest goods are of Rattan, Cane or Wood-slat bodies, with gear and wheels either painted or varnished. Parasols or Canopy Tops are equally fashionable. Our finest goods are upholstered in the richest Plain or Brocaded Satins. But we have Elegant Goods in Wool, Terry, Tapestry and Rami's Cloth. Notwithstanding our Carriages are better and handsomer than ever, the prices are lower. Call early and make your selections.

ABOUT ALLIGATORS.

THEIR USES AND THEIR CAPTURE. Six Thousand Young Keptiles Sold Annual ly-The Profits of the Trade-The Habits of the Beast.

James Otis in "The Continent." Six thousand baby alligators are sold in Florida every year, and the amount of ivory, number of skins, and quality of oil obtained from the older members of the Suarian family are sufficient to entitle them to a high place among the products of the state.

The hunter sell young "'gators" at $25 per hundred, and the dealer from 75 cents to one dollar each. Live alligators two years old represent to the captor 50 cents each, and to the dealer from two to five dollars, as the season of travel is at its heights or far advanced. A 10 foot alligator is worth $10 and one fourteen feet long $25 dollars to the hunter, while the dealer charges twice or three times that price. The eggs are worth to the hunter 50 cents per dozen and to the dealer 25 cents a piece.

The dead alligator is quite as valuable as the live one, for a specimen nine feet and reasonably fat will net both branches of the trade as follows:

THE HUNTER. | THE DEALER. Oil . . . $5 50 Oil . . . $7.50 1.00 Skin . . . 4.00 Skin . . . Head . . . 10.00 Head . . . 25.00 $16.50

The value of the head is ascertained by the number and size of the teeth. Dealers mount especially fine specimens of the skull, but the greater number have no other value than that of the ivory they

The wages of the hunter depend, of course, upon his good fortune in finding the game. One of the most expert of these gives as instances of successful hunts the items of three days' work which yielded thirty-nine dollars and seventyfive cents; of six days with a yield of twenty dollars and ten cents, and of eight days' hunting which netted forty dollars and twenty-five cents.

Without speaking of those enemies of the "'gator' who hunt him for sport, there are about two hundred men in the state of Florida who make a business and try to make a living by capturing or killing him. Very many have eaten alligator steaks from simple curiosity to learn its flavor; but many more eat it because it is the cheapest, and, oftentimes, the only meat they can afford. The flavor when it is fried or broiled is that of beefsteak plentifully supplied with fish gravy, while the fore-legs roasted taste like a mixture of chicken and fish, and have a delicate alligator, and very suspicious of anything interrupted shortly after he has killed his new around his home. When he starts out in search of food it is invariably an hour after the tide has begun to ebb, and shown by the fact that fresh fish and small he returns about four hours after low water. If he has a land journey to perform, he goes and comes by the same route, never deviating from it until he sees evidence that strangers have trespassed on Shall we speak of our great his domain. He lives on the banks of some stream, for he has decided objections to stagnant water, and to make his home he digs a hole at least twelve inches below the level of the water. This hole is per-fectly straight, although on an incline, and from twenty to thirty feet in length, terminating in a chamber sufficiently large to admit of his turning in it. There he or she dwells alone, save when the female is caring for a very young brood, in which case the one room is converted into a nursery. Full-grown alligators not only do not occupy the same hole, but they will not live near each other. The alligator usually lays her eggs about the first of July, and during the month of June she is busily engaged in preparing the cradle for her young. Selecting a place on the bank of some stream or creek, she begins work by beating hard and level with her tail an earth platform about six feet square. She scrapes together with her fore feet, oftentimes from a distance of fifty yards from the proposed nest, dried grass, sticks and mud until fifteen or twenty cubic feet of the material is in a place convenient for her purpose. On the day following the completion of these preparations she lays from thirty to fifty eggs on the prepared ground, and piles over them dried grass and mud deftly worked in with sticks until a mound six feet in diameter and three feet high has been raised. The surface of this is quickly hardened by the sun, and in order that it may be as nearly air tight as possible, the female visits it each day, covering with mud any crevices that may have ap peared, as well as remodeling such portions as do not satisfy her sense of beauty.

The ordinary time of incubation is about two months, and then the newly-hatched brood may be heard yelping and snarling for their mother to continue her work by for their mother to continue her work by releasing them from their prison nest. On the second or third day after the first noise has been heard, the female bites a hole in the side of the mound, out of which the young ones, barely more than eleven inches long, come tumbling in the most vigorous manner, crawling directly toward the water. Until the young are three years old the mother exercises a parental care over them, always remaining within ais own children in the way of food. When then the hunter finds a nest, he carries the eggs home to hatch them, where he can easily capture the brood if the eggs are fresh or if the young in them are not more than five inches long; at any other stage they will not hatch if removed and are of no value except for the shell. The captured eggs are then packed in straw as nearly as possible in the natural way, and the young may be thus hatched out very successfully. One farmer reared sixteen hundred and another a thousand last season. The young will eat immediately after coming out of the shell, but they thrive best if given no food for at volume of sound which comes from these science monsters when he sees a full-grown one put forth all his strength to produce the effect. He stretches his body to its full somewhat, and since, when his jaws are once closed he is unable to open them if only a moderate amount of strength on the part of man be used, the hunter of the part of man be used, the hunter of the part of man be used, the hunter of the part of man be used, the hunter of the part of man be used, the hunter of the part of the p selects this point for attack when it is possible for him to steal upon his game tip of his tail, and the 'gator is helpless. It is seldom, however, that the hunter gets his game at a disadvantage, and to secure him alive he must set about the work much as boys do when they snare rabbits. A tall, stont sapling near the water's edge is the first requisite, and directly in front of that, in the water, a narrow lare or pen is made with stakes, the two outer ones being notched, as is the spindle of a box-trap. At the end of this pen, and nearer the shore, a stake is driven into the mud, and on the top of it is fastened a piece of tainted beef. A stout rope, at one end of which is a large noose, is fastened to the top of the sapling and to the upper part of the noose is attached a cross-bar, or trigger, which, when the tree is bent, catches in the notches on the outer stakes just below the surface of the water, the noose hanging around the entire opening. To get at the meat the alligator attempts to swim under the bar, but his back displaces the trigger, and he is a captive, with the rope fastened just back of his fore legs. It is necessary to bind the captive while he is in the water, and then to carry him to the shore in a boat; for, amphibious as he is, he can be drowned if dragged even a short distance through the water. When once properly secured and on land, the alligator can do nothing in the hope of effecting a release, save to roll over, and this he does by a mighty effort with his shoulders, frequently working himself over a quarter of a mile in distance in a single night. Those who are most familiar with the habits of the alligator, as seen in the Southern states, believe his partiality for decayed food does not arise from any particular flavor it may possess, but simply because in a putrid state any large amount of flesh is more easily torn apart and masticated than when fresh. Although the possessor of so much ivory in the shape of teeth, and able to use its jaws with so much power, it is an extremely difficult matter for an alligator to dismember a pig, even after the flesh is de-cayed. While the meat is yet firm and the muscles intact, it is an impossibility for him to do other than swallow it nearly Very methodical in his habits is the whole, as he sometimes does when he is prey. That am when it is possible for them to eat it is turtles are their favorite diet. In the stomach of a 12 foot alligator there have been found six catfish, none of them mutilated, weighing altogether 34 pounds. If one believes implicitly the positive assertion of the alligator hunters, he must perforce say no man knows the span of life allotted these Saurians. The native Floridian, as well as the hunter, will insist that the largest of the 'gators are more than a hundred years old, pointing to the fact of his slow growth in proof of the assertion. A newly-hatched alligator is eleven inches long; at the age of six years he is very slim and but three feet in length; at ten years of age he has gained considerably in breadth and but twelve inches in length, while during the next two years he has grown hardly more than one inch longer. An alligator fifteen feet in length caught near the mouth of the St. John' river, was so covered with barnacles and other marine growth as to make it almos

certain that he must have been in exist ence seventy-five years. BUCHANAN'S GIOGRAPHY.

A Book That will Command Attention.

N. Y. Journal of Commerce, Harper & Brothers have in press and announce for publication in the spring a biography of James Buchanan, by George Ticknor Curtis. That such a biography will be of the highest interest and value it is not necessary to say. The true history of Mr. Buchanan's administration has up to the present time been a profound secret For while an immense deal has been written about it, no writer has had any documentary authority for his estimate of the motives, intentions and prevailing counsels of the president and cabinet in the trying times which preceded the war. From the later history of such men as Cass, Dix, Stanton, Holt and others, it has been generally regarded as settled that Mr. Buchanan was alone responsible for the course of his administration. But the history of that administration hitherto published has been in large part conjectural and imaginary. It is of the highest important that that history should be known. The time has long passed when from political feelng any one could desire to suppress the truth, and now all men will be glad to take dispassionate view of the men and the events of twenty-three years ago at Washington. Mr. Buchavan was in the habit of making brief and clear memoranda of daily conversations, interviews and occursorbing interest. Its revelations will undoubtedly surprise all who have accepted as true the supposed histories which have dissent from the policy of an administra-tion, which policy they in fact guided and tant period of our history since the revo lution, and knowing as we do, the material which he left to be used at the proper time, we have no doubt that Mr. Parlor Organ Warerooms, Curtis has made such use of it that the publication will throw clearer light on history than any or all of the books which possible for him to steal upon his game unawares. If the intending captor gets a firm hold upon the jaws of his game in this way, the monster becomes reasonably easy prey; one rope soon secures his jaws, another is tied around his neck and fastened to a tree, while a third secures his tail in the same way, thus stretching the captive in a straight line; his fore paws are tied over his back, a stout pole is lashed from the end of his snout to the tip of his tail, and the 'gator is helpless. I Wish Everybody to Know.

E. Asenith Hall, Binghamton, N. Y. writes:
"I suffered for several months with a dull pain through the left lung and shoulders. I lost my spirits, appetite and color, and could with difficulty keep up all day. My mother procured some Burdock Blood Bitters; I took them as directed, and have feit no pain since first week after using them, and am now quite well." Price $1. For sale by H. B.
