TUESDAY FVENING, APRIL 3, 1883,

- UNDER THE MASKS. As from the throng of moving masks I drew a space apart, Well known to some unknown to me.
- By my imperfect art, One, in the habit of a nun, Stopped short as in surprise,
- Two soft regarding eyes. Long looked we both, for half I telt Her gaze no mischiel spoke, And then it was a woman's hand

And through her domino I saw

- Reached to me from the cloak : A voice I never heard before, But most sincere and sweet. Said, " Ah! my love, do we once more
- Touch hand to hand and meet:
- " Fair 'tomino," I said, " indeed Unmask before you go,
- And tell your trouble in my ear; Why do you tremble so ?"
- "I tremble for the virgin years, When o'er my mind supreme, You were the hero of my fears,
- The gallant of my dream."
- " And did I never know your will
- When then, pershauce, my heart, Like yours, was longing for a shrine,
- A mistress, or an art ;" . No, mine was all the plea ant pain, And Heaven permits it here,
- To say that still, as when a mild, I follow your career.
- My husband passes-Nay . . . u must : No guilty secret mine," A strong man's hand came frankly forth
- I saw his dark eyes shine . " In honor's way God keep you long!"
- These manly sounds I heard, " And never may you cease to be
- Our favorite household word." They vanished in the moving crowd And left me wondering quite,
- Until I heard my comrade say : "Whom have you seen to-night :" " To guess," I aid " were fruitless fask
- When all this maze I see: But If they ever come in mask
- Two angels sooke to me."

- George Alfred Townsend THE AMERICAN DRAMA.

Jeaquin Miller. Keeping in view the iron pikes set up for the immolation of pirates' heads, I venture to note some reflections about the coming play. The car; enter who now poss sees the stage with his reenic effects is not the enemy of the playwright, as so many say ; he is our auxiliary, and the scenic painter is our brother. We need, and must have, them both when the great play is written. Let us only do our work as well as they do theirs, and the public is ours.

As for this "great American play," some one of us will write it soon. And it will not only be the great play of America, but the great play of the age, the world. For out youder in the middle of America, beyond where the stormy sea of tradition from Europe rolls over us, I think we have the new, strong and sufficient motive to fashion it from.

The heroes of Homer shook their shields and recited the deeds of their fathers and grandfathers, even back to the gods. All Greek tragedy is in the same strain. St. l'aul found the Greeks great talkers. Civilization, in its march west around the world has been faithful to the Greek drama. Words! words! words! But out yonder, in the far West, this is all changed. The American pure and simple does not talk. He acts. And this grand, silent, massive American is to be the central figure for the American, the entirely new play. Whether this dignity of soul is born of the sublimity about him, the eternal peaks of snow above him, the vast tranquility of the plain below, I do not ay. But I do say that this grand, unspeaking, acting man exists-a new man, a silent man in a noisy world. And I should say he is peculiarly the growth of the land. For who ever saw an Indian whom wrong, or pain, or pity could move to words or tears? What West. He us d but two words in all the grand drama of the seizure of Vicksburg, "Unconditional Eurrender!" I admit that along the Atlantic seabank there seems a noisy brood; aboard, too, and in Congress, for the old Bible fool, known by his "multitude of words," is alike in all lauds. And the fool has his uses, even in the drama. But this silent map, with his silent woman at his side, this man of the map of t that along the Atlantic seabank there silent woman at his side, this man of action and not of words, from Middle America, as the central figure, is to mark and distinguish the new world play from

I have had a gilmpse of my silent man in Joe Jefferson ; only for a moment, however, for a drunken Knickerbocker is very remote from the hero I have in mind. But surely Jefferson has met and observed my silent man in the farthest West. Davy Crockett, however, in more than one sense discovers his character almost entirely. Yet this may be accounted for by the fact that Mayo, the most studious of men, spent his youth on the Pacific, where he must have met and understood this silent man of deeds. There is a little scene at the well ; the old mother comes to draw water. Davy drops every thing, tenderly takes the bucket, draws, fills it, bears it away for his mother without let ting the frail, trembling old hand touch it, and hands it through the door after her. I do not remember that one word is spoken here. But I do know that more tears have been shed over that one silent and really insignificant scene than would till the bucket. Oh, the tender machood

Another quaint bit from the West, which stands out like a star to me, is found in "My l'actner," Gentle Old Joe Saunders is going to divide the gold and go away, for there is bitter trouble. He digs up the gold from the hearth and pours it out on the table, where his silent partner sits with bowed face. He divides the gold with his knife. " Is that about

"Yes, yes," answered the other, still looking away. And then Joe, and all the time without a word being spoken, pushes more gold to his partner's heap. Seeing that he is not observed he cautiously slips ever another nugget. Then he picks out at last the largest of his little heap, and, unseen, adds it to his successful rival's fortune. What a profanity words would be at such a time!

At West Point you read on a little monument that a portion of our army, being ambushed in one of our Indian wars, every man stood his ground, fighting till only three survived, when help came. Grand! Immortal! But what moved me and seems most truly American is the fact, as told me by a survivor, that not one word of command was given after the first order. Every officer silently drew his sword, became a common soldier, and so fought on to the end. There was no need of command, only the low prayer of the dying; the message to the loved ones at home; and all day the deadly tight went That is America, that is American I is the germ of the great American play. Years ago I crossed over the Sierras into the new mines of Nevada, then a part of California, I found an old friend CAPITALISTS AND OTHERS standing at the mouth of his mine shout ing out his commands in monosyllables down the shaft. New cities gleamed below; mines opened above; progress thundered through the land. "What are you doing here?" I cried. He took in the horizon under his hat; bit off the end of his cigar; locked at the new cities paying over 6½ per cent, clear of all Taxes and Water Rents. Rents guaranteed. HENRY BECHTOLD, Real Estate and Insurance Agent.

P. S.—Choice Building Lots from $15 to $50 end of his cigar ; looked at the new cities below; the tremendous mining engines all about, the tunnels piercing the mountains above, but did not speak. "Why, what on earth you all doing here in Mevada?" I again shouted. "World building!" And that was all that this silent man, now a United States senator, answered. It was enough. He made that word then and there, I think. He coined it as from his new silver.
