PROHIBITION.

A PRACTICAL AND PHILOSOPHICAL VIEW.

By a Friend of Temperance Who is Thoughtful and Religious Man. In the current number of the Reformed Quarterly Review, Rev. J. Spangler Kieffer, of Hagerstown, Md., one of the most thoughtful and scholarly young clergymen "Prohibitory Temperance Legislation." which is at once able, practical and philosophical, and in which extracts we make will indicate the drift of it, though the entire paper is well worth reading:

If any one were disposed to enumerate the errors of the temperance movement, it would not be difficult to make out a list of considerable length. In its zeal for the good cause of temperance, it has some times manifested, or at least some of its leading representatives have manifested, no small amount of intemperance. It has shown a disposition to anathematize those who, though strongly believing in temperance, have not been able to concur with it in regard to the wisdom of some of its means and methods. It has perverted Scripture, inventing for its purposes a convenient theory of two kinds of wine, fermented and unfermented, known to the Bible; a theory which has scarcely secured the support of a single Biblical scholar of the first rank, and which is rejected by the almost unanimous testimony of the Christian missionaries laboring at the present day in the holy land. It is professed a greater strictness than that of Jesus Christ and His apostles, even going so far as to recommend the substrict of water for wine in the the taste of the wine, the integrity of some reforming drunkard should be endangered. It has confided too much in the power of external checks and restraints; magnifying into primary importance means which can never be other than secondary and auxiliary; aiming at the cutting off of the supply, rather than at the extinguishing of the demand; seeming to lay more stress upon the prohibiting law without than upon the prohibiting will within. It has warfed the large and noble conception of temperance into the far narrower Lotion of total abstinence from intoxicating drinks. And total abstinence, again, which, under its proper form, is a large and noble conception too, it has degraded in the very act of seeking to exalt it. For, instead of placing it where Paul places it, on the basis of love, as a matter of Chrisof charity to the weakness of a weak brother, it seeks to stiffen it into a matter of necessary principle and universal obii gation, exacting total abstinence from drinking as the decalogue exacts total perance movement, amid all its extravagances, that soul of goodness, without which it would be impossible to account for its persistent vitality, its constant re- away. The stream was down the mouncurrence under different forms, its embrac intellects and noblest hearts in the land. It is one conspicuous form of the spirit of alert and aggressive enemy of the spirit of under all its phases, by a high, honorable, it is animated by a strong desire to see order, and decency, and thrift, and happiness prevail among the people. These are good things, deserving to be gladly and gratefully recognized by all good men. far more of the essence of the temperance movement than its perversions of scrip ture, or its occasional denunciation of accept its theories as to the proper place and character of total abstinence. Under its manifold forms, this movement stands forth as a representative of, and a witness community against an egregious wrong. Its activity is one of the activities of conway, and stumble and get the wrong weapon into its hands, can never, in all its gropings, be wholly otherwise than grand. The average temperance reformer, preach ing temperance in season and out of season; persisting in his de nunciations and in his pleadings, whether men will hear or whether they will forbear; not unfrequently meeting with inattention, ridicule or persecution in the prosecution of his mission, is, notwithstanding the measure of fanaticism which may sometimes be found in him, a character most worthy of respect. He is mostly a sombre and severe man; often eccentric, narrow-minded and denunciatory; carried away by an overwhelming and infatuating sense of his "mission" His character stiff and angular, his voice high and shrill, he is by no means an altogether lovely object. There is no "beauty" in him; he is an offence against æsthetics. But let him not le regarded with scorp, nor let it be supposed that he has no mission to fulfil for mankind. His offences against æsthetics are perhaps more than atoned for by his haps, that which is better than beauty, or that, at least which will prove to be largely serviceable to the ultimate attain ment of the beauty that is true and con tinuing..... In the far reaching agitation and aggression of the prohibition movement, there is one feature in which all good men, notwithstanding their possible differences as to other features of it, can unite in re joicing. All good men can rejoice, namely, over the manifestation of the granduer and power of a moral idea. It is a noble and inspiring sight to see the moral sense of a virtue loving people awaking and rousing itself for the forbidding of that which s wrong. It has been an edifying spectacle to see conscience dictating terms to political parties; to behold the profession al politician, who has never been known for his temperance principles, by compulsion industriously engaged in the preparation of prohibition platforms. And, if not edifying, it has been at least amusing, to observe the curious obeisance occasion-Coal Oil Lamps. ally rendered to this awakened moral sense by those who were continually dreading its wrath, and the equally curious nce threw their ranks; to read how, in Illinois, for example, the distillers felt themselves obliged, as a concession to the temperance sentiment, to pass resolutions in favor of keeping the Sabbath, while the brewers, on the other hand, taking offence at this, fell to denouncing whisky! It is a most impressive, as well a most wholesome thing, whether for a man or a nation, to be filled evil thing shall no longer be tolerated."

Of this grand and beneficient wrath, and of this terror stricken and compulsory reverence for the supremacy of that which is moral, there has been much, we would fain believe, in the prohibition agitation; and over this, at least, all who love righteousness and truth can unite in sincerely re-which we have cited the testimony of Judge Williams may serve as an example. But, on the other hand, the same policy been passed, as that so large a majority of the people have been sufficiently awakened to the evils of the liquor traffic, to go to the polls and vote for the passing of it. Men are apt, indeed, to attribute the prohibiting efficacy to the law itself, because that is as conspicuous in the case as the moral sentiment behind it is inconspicuous and concealed. But all the facts go to show that there is in any prohibitory law just so much prohibiting energy as the moral sentiment of the community puts into it, and no more. [Concluded To-morrow.]

I am confident it is a cure for the most obstinate cold or cough, and if any one will take a small teaspoon and half fill it with the Oil, and then piace the end of the spoon in one nostril and draw the Oil out of the spoon in to the head by sniffing as hard as they can, until the Oil falls over into the throat, and practice that twice a week, I don't care how offensive their head may be, it will clean it out and cure their catarrh. For deafness and carache it has done wonders to my certain knowledge. quarrel with evil. It is one exceedingly disorder and ruin. It is characterized, wholesome and baneficent wrath against lawlessness, indecency, waste and cruelty; And these things, as it seems to us, are those friends of temperance who cannot to, an awakened moral sentiment in the science; that great power within us, which however it may sometimes miss the better services to morals. There is in him, per-joicing.

The prohibitive policy has confessedly worked well in certain localities and under certain conditions. It has been successful in Maine; its effect, as far as we are able to ascertain, has been salutary in New Hampshire and Vermont; and its working has been particularly benefi-cent in many of the "local option" dis-tricts, of which the county respecting has been tried, and has confessedly failed. in New York and Massachusetts; and few would be so bold as to argue from its success in the remote, rural and sparsely settled county of Potter in Pennsylvania, or in certain rural counties of Maryland, that it would be equally successful in New York city of any other great com-mercial or manufacturing centre of population. As far as we are able to judge, the evidence shows that the working of prohibition depends on the character of the community; it has worked well in agricultural and thinly-settled districts, particularly in Puritan communities where there is a strong public sentiment against intemperance; it has failed, or is apt to fail, in more densely populated districts, particularly in those communities which contain a large element of foreign population. That is to say, the history of prohibition shows that the power of prohibitory temperance legislation is in a peculiar manner qualified and conditioned; that the prohibiting efficacy lies, not in the statute itself, but in the prohibiting moral sentiment of which the statute is the expression. This being present, the prohibitory law may be ex-pected to prohibit; this wanting, nothing else can infuse prohibiting energy into it. In every case, the moral sentiment which demands and secures the passing of the law or the constitutional amendment, is the ultimate and actual prohibit ing power. When, in any particular state, a prohibitory constitutional amendment is adopted by a majority of fifty thousand, the really significant fact, and the chief reason for hoping that intemperance will actually cease in that state, is, not so much that the amendment has
