SEED BEDS. Hints on Seed Sowing and Growing.

Germantown Telegraph It should be remembered that much of the success in the growing of seeds depends on keeping the seeds moist and near the air. If they are on the surface they have air enough, but no moisture; if they are deep in the ground they have moisture, · but no air, hence the seed sower has to have a good practical knowledge of the seeds he is sowing in order to grade the depth of the seed, or how to operate so as to get all the needed conditions without sowing the seed too deep. Many seeds have the power of sprouting very soon after they are sown. These may go on to a moist surface with little chance of the ground drying out before the seeds come up; but those which take several weeks to germipate require more knowledge and care. The best of all methods of guarding against the drying out of seeds sown ucar the surface is to prepare the soil first so that it shall be reduced to powder. To this end on the farm the roller is one of the most valuable implements. In many cases where land is coarsely tilled, large quantities of seed do not come up, be-cause much is too deep and more near the surface dries up, and because the coarse seil retains little meisture. Half the seed often sown might be saved if the ground were crushed by good rolling before sowing. Nearly every seed would then grow instead of half as now, and grow more regularly.

In the garden as on the farm much might be saved by attention to this simple fact. How many persons ever saw a reller in a vegetable garden? Not many. But whenever it is used a very great degree of success is sure to follow. In the fall, before the strawberry beds are completed, the ground should be first rolled, after being dug, and then the plants should be set out even in the dryest time, without being obliged to bury the crowns, which should always be avoided if possible. Well rolled and firmly set, the plants never dry up and seldomone fails to grew. In the spring, also, before sowing and seed, the roller should go ever the prepared ground a few days after being dug and raked. In such case it will be found that the seed will so generally grow that it will not require one half the quantity that the unrolled ground will. Try it and see, all who have not yet adopted this method.

The same course should be taken in forwarding seeds grown in boxes and placed in the windows, instead of hotbeds. If the seeds in this case be sown shallow, the sunlight through the glass dries the surface too much, and seeds do not grow well. So in order to guard against this, take a piece of newspaper to fit the surface of the box and lay it loosely over the seeds. In this way the surface keeps moist for a week without watering, while in other cases it is necessary to sprinklo perhaps every day, and often the box gets so much water in this way as to make the bulk of water sour, so that after the seeds do sprout they rot off. In this way, too, great success will attend the growing of
