"No," said the engineer, as he closed one valve and opened another, 'I wasn't always an engineer. I wasn't anything for a long time. I had the knowledge in my head all the while, but it was lost under a heap of rubbish. "What fools men are when they're left to themselves sometimes ! Now look at me. Would you say I was ever a tramp?" A tramp? his white muscular throat— while and wholesome under the coal dust

-his strong, well-knitted frame, clear eye and firm hand, denoted a man of pluck paper called La Presse. It was noticed and courage, a practical worker, not the that Planchet continually kept his eye, as CUTICURA REMEDIES are the geatest medicines on earth. Had the worst case sail rheum in this county. My mother had it twenty years, and in fact died from it. I believe CUTICURA would have saven her life. My arms, breast, and head were covered for three years, which nothing relieved or cured until I used the CU TICURA HESOLVENT internally, and CUTICURA and CUTICURA SOAP externally. J. W. ADAMS. "But I was gentlemen," he said, coolly sighting a long stretch of road over the one, and I worked harder and suffered more to get myself in that condition than I ever did to reach this," and he looked flying steed.

"I tell you how it was," he said at last as he slowed up to round a curve and then went easily on past the fields clad in their summer verdure, past woods that were panoramic in a flush of beauty, and away into the open country. "I was a tramp-no matter how I came to be or why. They say every man has his price, and they offered me mine ; it was the price of my soul too, and I agreed to take the money and do the work.

"It was this-to sneak around and get acquainted with the inside of a house-the house of the richest man in the place, and to show them the way; they said I looked the most respectble for the purpose. A Curtous Story. There has just died at the Charenton insane asylum a man named Rousset, with whom is connected a very curious story. In 1853 Rousset, then aged 37, assassinated an old gentleman named Damours in order to steal his valuables. Rousset's trial created an immense sensation and crowds of spectators filled the court room, a number of whom were allowed to seat themselves on the bench reserved for the accused. Rousset was what may be termed a timid villain, and invariably sat with his head hung down, thus ex-posing the back of his thick, bull like A tramp ? his white muscular throat-white and wholesome under the coal dust just behind him, a jovial young fellow named Planchet, an employee of a newson the accused, Planchet drew his hand across the former's neck, at the same time sighting a long stretch of road over the backbone of his engine and letting her out a little for a dead-level heat. I was not fell forward, uttering the most piercing only a tramp, but the meanest kind of shricks. Planchet was immediately arrested and afterwards condemned to two years' imprisonment for this offense. Rousset was picked up hopelessly insane proudly at the polished trimmings of his Napoleon III. granted him a reprieve. He has since then been incarcerated at Charenton. He was quite harmless, enjoyed good health, and it is said played checkers remarkably well. His chief topic of conversation, however, was his being guillotined and the consequent loss of his head. He would describe this in its most horrible minute details, sending cold shivers through every nerve of his listeners' body. A DRUNKEN RUFFIAN.

He Shoots His Wife, Threatens a Police-man, and Cuts His Own Throat.

Francis Larkins, of No. 230 North Eighth street. Brooklyn, returned home Tuesday afternoon after a prolonged spree. He had a dispute with his wife, and, after high words by both of them, he drew his revolver and fired at her. Her mouth was open and the bullet entered it, pass-ing out through the left sheek causing a compound fracture of the jaw. The neighborhood was aroused by the sound of the firing, and Policeman Timothy Phelan was summoned. As the office attempted to enter the room where Larkins brandished his revolver, the latter fired, narrowly missing the policeman's head. As he dodged back to avoid any more bullets, Larkins took up his razor and cut a frightful gash in his throat. The wounded man and woman were taken to
