could have homes of their own, but with the wages they now earn comparatively few can secure them. He estimated that it cost the farmer, on an average, 30 cents per day for each hand he boarded; and that it was better for the farmer to pay this sum and to hire an extra cow, if one is needed, rather than pay the increased wages demanded, lose the time and suffer the other inconveniences that follow when the hands board themselves.

Mr. Cooper maintained that to make the laboring man a better citizen it was necessary to give him a chance to get a home of his own. The farmer has to pay from $1 to $1.10 per day to the farm hands which he boards. He can get them without board at from $1.25 to $1.40. If their board costs him 30 cents per day he is losing nothing by letting them board themselves, while he is encouraging them to have homes of their own and thus make of them better and steadier men.
