the medical jury at the last Paris Exposition Knowing the value of such high and unblased testimony, the medical profession, both in the United States and in Europe, quickly threw aside the old, slow-acting plasters they had been using, and adopted Benson's in their regular practice. That physicians and surgeons of the broadest reputation did this, distinctly proves the intrinsic merit of the article.

It is no n ore than just to add that the aver age physician of to-day is not dominated by the prejudices which retarded the progress and modified the successes of his predecessors of not more than twenty-five years ago. A POET'S ROMANCE.

JOAQUIN MILLER'S MARRIED LIFE

How the Poet of the Sierras was Married Divorced and at Last Keunited With His Wife Joaquin Miller in San Francisco Chronicle.

She seemed to see wreck and storm and separation for us on the area of life long before it came, and even when we were newly married, very hopeful, young and strong and happy. And so, 20 years ago this spring, while we were living in the top of a house in Fulton street, San Francisco, No. 421 with this singular and sad notion in her head, she one evening half playfully said that, whatever came to us, if I died first she would write me well before the world and let none do my memory wrong. And she exacted the same promise from me. And from that time, so far from forgetting the foolish covenant, she reminded me of it ever after. She reminded me of it in this city only a few days before her death, last May. In the fulfilment of this promise I now undertake this most delicate and most difficult task. For it is on my conscience that the occasion is opportune and that I cannot well conclude these sketches of my life in the Sierras in this journal, without trying, after a year's delay, to keep this covenant and solemn promise of twenty years ago.

It was while I was riding Mossman & to Millersburg, in the mines of Idaho, in the summer of 1861, that I first was attracted by her writings in the newspapers. I wrote her and had replies. Then when I came down from the mountains and embarked in journalism she wrote to me and our letters grew ardent and full of affection. Then I mounted my horse and rode hundreds of miles through the valleys and over the mountains, till I came to the sea at Port Orford, then a fiourishing mining town, and there first saw "Minnie Myrtle." Tall, dark and striking in every respect, this first Saxon woman I had ever addressed had it all her own way at once. She knew nothing at all of my life, except that I was an expressman and country editor. I knew nothing at all of hers, but I found her with her kind, good parents, surrounded by brothers and sisters, and the pet and spoiled child of the mining and lumber camp. In her woody little world there by the sea she was literally worshipped by the rough miners and lumbermen, and the heart of the bright and merry girl was brimming full of romance, hope and happiness. I arrived on Thursday. On Sunday next we were married! Oh, to what else but ruin and regret could such romantic folly lead?

And it was perhaps quite ten ing on to our impatient horses. We reached my home all right, however, at length, after a week's ride, but only to find that my paper had been suppressed by the government, and we resolved to seek our fortunes in San Francisco. But we found neither fortune nor friends in the great new city, and so returning to Oregon I bought a band of cattle and we ect out with our baby and a party of friends and relatives to reach the new mining camp, Canyon City, in Eastern Oregon. In fact, I had gone before to spy out the land. We fought the Indians and got some foothold and we selected this location for our future home,

And what a journey was this of ours over the Oregon Sierras, driving the bel lowing eattle in the narrow trail through and lasso, slashing after the cattle. But when we descended the wooded mountains day and night And this woman was one knew what fear was. She was not only and so was forever pinched and in debt. wonderful horse-woman but very adroit taken position on a hill with a few men, while the cattle and pack animals were corralled by the others in a bight in the foothills below to prevent a stampede. And thus intrenched, we waited the attack rom the Indians, who held the further point of the ridge on which I had stationed my men. Suddenly Minnie, babe in arms, stood at my side and began to calmly discuss the situation and to pass merry remarks about the queer noises the bullets made as they flattened on the rocks about us and glanced over our heads. I finally got her to go down, or, rather, promised to go lown to camp for the better safety of the baby. But in a moment she was back. She had hidden the laughing little baby in the rocks, and now, gun in hand, kept at my side till the brush was over and the Indians beaten off.

Here is one leaf from her journal, or rather, I think, her recollections of the ourney, which she left me along with her other papers when she died : "One night of that journey I shall not soon forget. There had been some fightng ahead of us and we knew the foe was lurking in ambush. They made a kind of fort of the freight and while we lay down in the canon, baby and I, away up on the high sharpe butte, Joaquin stood sentinel.

And I say this to night in his behalf and in his praise, that he did bravely and saved his loved ones from peril that night. That he stood on that dreary summit, a target for the foe and no one but me to take note of his valor-stood till the morning shone radiant, stood till the night was passed. There was no world looking on to praise his courage and echo it over the land; only the frozen stars in mystic groups far away and the slender moon, tailed in a previous sketch, practised law, mined, fought Indians and indeed was the busiest of men in trying all means to get on. I planted the first orchard in all that land, pushed ahead as hard as I could and tried to be punctual and steady and thenghtful Vac. I have a steady and tried to be punctual and steady and the steady and tried to be punctual and steady and day to assure her that she was coming and thoughtful. My life was a sober and severe Then the child came and the good people,

The mystery of making fire by the friction of two sticks of wood, the secret of finding water in the death of the court of the cou friction of two sticks of wood, the secret of finding water in the desert by the flight of a bird, the cunning of foretelling the force of the coming winter or the depth of the show—all these and the like and the

Often I never left my office till the gray dawn, after a day of toil and a night of study. My health gave way and I was indeed old and thoughtful. Well, all this you can see did not suit the merry-hearted and spoiled hill of the mineral of Them showed. child of the mines at all. Then she was not so ambitious as I was; then she had not such a strange, wild life behind to haunt her. She became the spoiled child here that she had been at her father's and naturally grew impatient at my persistent toil and study. But she was good at all the time; good and honest and true in all things and in all ways; understand that distinctly. And let me say here, once for all, that no man or woman can put a finger on any stain in this woman's whole record of life, so far as truth and purity go. But she was not happy here. Impatient of the dull monotony of the exhausted mining camp and longing for the Miller's pony express from Walla Walla sea and the old home that almost overhung the sounding waters, she took her two children and returned to her mother, while I sold the little home we had built and kept together, the new orchard and laues of roses we had planted together, and remained there in the camp promising to follow her, yet full of ambition now to

A few thousand dollars I had thrown up And now having hastily passed over all stormy night in silence till we came at house, with a bed in the centre and a dark. She did not give me her hand, but stood before me with one hand holding on

And as she turned so that the light was on her face I saw that it was so. And then we sat down and had a long talk. It was our last talk. I was not very kind God knows I am sorry now. She wanted most of all to see her little girl, whom I had taken from her and placed in the con vent school in Canada three years before, and it seemed to break her heart when refused to send for her to come. By and by, however, when I promised her that she should surely see her before she died, she became reconciled. She talked with calm unconcern about her coming death. reminded me of my promise and told me she had brought me all her papers; some that we had written together before I had learned to spell. There was a valor, a sweetness, too, and a dignity, a large charity in all she said and did now in the twilight of life that won all hearts to her entirely. My secrets she kept till the grave closed over her. And she never complained of anything or of any one, but was patient, resigned and perfectly fearless and tranquil to the end.
But the end was not so near after all.

away, had forwarded papers from her home, hundreds of miles remote, to a lawyer here, praying for a divorce. This so put me to shame that I abandoned my plans and in rage and disappointment formed a collusion with her lawyer to give her a pretense of that which she professed to desire. Yet I knew quite well that this was only a romantic and foolish freak that meant nothing. How often she has written me that she did this only in order to get me to come to her and that she did not dream she could be divorced unless I came to her when the action was brought. Nor could she in fact. But a court was in session, and her lawyer, who looked to me only for his fee, entered the case, and in about the time it takes to write it the sham decree was aunounced to the world, while I was sailing away for other

I, beaten and discouraged and broken in health, had retreated to a garret and was then again preparing to use my pen, when one stormy night a strange woman crept up my stairs and told me in a wild whisper that my wife, "Minnie Myrtle," was in the city and must see me. And how helpless I was to her or any one now. I had seen her form but once for nearly a dozen years. And such years! Let me not recite any of the horrors they hold in this connection : and yet I heard from her all the time, and while she wrote about me and lectured the dense woods, up the steep, snowy about me and did all that made my life so mountains, down through the roaring miserable, she did not really mean my canons! It was wild, glorious, fresh, full ruin; but thinking me strong and prosof hazard and adventure! Minnie had perous and happy she exhausted her wit made a willow basket and swung it to her and sarcasm on me and laughed that she saddle horn, with the crowing and good might not weep. But in time she drove me nearly mad and I left the country and laughing, as she leaped her horse over the proposed never to return.
