SAM WARD IN A NOVEL.

"Uh! Listen to the Mocking Bird" of a Nephew..

F. Marion Crawford, the author of "Doctor Claudius," thus describes his maternal uncle Sam Ward, under the name of Horace Bellingham : "He was short, decidedly; but a broad deep chest and long normarful arms had given his and long powerful arms had given him many an advantage over taller adversaries in strange barbarous lands. He was per-fectly bald, but that must have been because nature had not the heart to cover such a wonderful cranium from admiring gazes of phrenologists. A sweeping mousgazes of phrenologists. A sweeping mous-tache and a long imperial of snowy white sat well on the ruddy tan of his complex-ion, and gave him an air at once martial and diplomatic. He was dressed in the most perfect of London clothes, and there were superb diamonds ir his shirt while a priceles superb diamonds in his shirt while a priceless sapphire sparkled in a piain gold setting on his broad brown hand. He is the only man of his time who can wear precious stones without vulgarity. He moves like a king and has the air of the old school in every feature. His dark eyes are brighter than his diamonds and his look, for all his white beard and 70 years, is as young and fresh as the rose he wears in his coat. There are some people who turn gray, but who do do not turn heary, whos. aces are furrowed but not wrinkled, whose hearts are sore wounded in many places but are not dead. There is a youth that bids defiance to age and there is a kind ness which laughs at the world's rough usage. These are they who have returned good for evil, not having learned it is a lesson of righteousness, but because they they have no evil in them to return upon others. Whom the gods love die young, and they die young because they never grow old. The poet, who at the verge of death said this, said it of, and to, this very man."
