THE VIRGINIA DUEL.

TWO EDITORS DETERMINED TO FIGHT

Particulars of the Meeting—The Combatants Face to Face-Elam's Second Experience.

There seems to be no reason to doubt the physical courage of the Virginia edi-tors who fought the duel, nor their desire to get together. It is a remarkable fact that the duellists had never seen each other until they met on the field. When Beirne escaped from Hanover Junction, eight days ago, he fled to West Virginia, while Elam sought to secure a hiding place near Richmond. The question then arose: "How were the parties to be got to-gether?" The difficulties were enhanced by the fact that all avenues of communication were under espionage. The authorities were on the lookout along the lines of all the railroads, and had drawn a com-plete cordon of detectives and deputy sheriffs around the duellists. McCarthy, Royall, Ragland and all parties suspected of connection with the duel were watched.
At length McCarthy resolved to resort to cipher dispatches. Two messengers were sent to Beirne in West Virginia, one bearing a pair of navy six revolvers, and the other the key to the cipher. They went by different routes, and the cipber man was chased by deputy sheriffs, who suspected him. He escaped by running through a corn field. The railroad authorities, who read and gave away to the authorities every telegram that passed the authorities every telegram that passed through concerning the duellists, were baffled as they perused the cipher dispatches, which discussed brilliant transactions in tobacco, rash attempts to bull the wheat market, and the prospects of a brilliant season at the White Sulphur Springs. The dispatch which amointed Springs. The dispatch which appointed the place of meeting discussed the maple sugar crop of Greenbrier county. By means of this cipher the cartel and all necessary preliminaries were arranged. The cartel provided that the meeting should be within two miles of Waynesboro at 41 a. m., on the old stage road. The password was "Number One." Mr. Beirne lest Greenbrier county on Tuesday night in company with Frank Wright. The rain was coming down in torrents. Beirne and Wright had to keep away from the railroad and take the most out of the way wagon roads. To add to their troubles the mountains streams were swollen, and once the wagon and its occupants were swept down the stream. They travelled night and day, and managed to make the trip of nearly 200 miles without being discovered. The men were determined to fight, for both of them realized that if they did not exchange shots neither could show himself in Richmand mond. Elam, who had been in hiding near Richmond, in the suburbs of Hauover, by Henry Clay's birthplace, took to as Beirne, being dogged at every step, but he appreciated thoroughly the situation, and was determined on getting to the appointed place of meeting. It might be a matter of death to him, but to fail to get there, he thought was a matter of dis

As the men neared the place of meeting the difficulties around them thickened, and many tricks and disguises were resorted Through flood and field, by night or day, the two duellists went for each other, at night lying in henroosts or creeping into bares or dark cabins. On Thursday night it was understood that they were about sixty miles apart. Early on Friday morning Elam passed through Brown's Gap in the Blue Ridgo mountains, and reached Lieut. Gov. Lewis' house on Friday night. Bierno and his second reached the scene of the meeting about the same time and slept all night in their wagon on the battle ground. Waynesboro is a very old town nuder the western shadow of the Blue Ridge. It was selected because it was almost midway between Greenbrier county, where Bierne was, and the slashes of Hanover, where Elam was. Thr weariness of the long journey did not cool their ardor. About two miles north west of Waynesborough, in Augusta county, is a nest of native oaks, free from undergrowth, and one of the most fertile parts of the valley. In the depth of this woodland is a deep depression, the ground rising abruptly on either side, forming a kind of ampitheatre This spot was the place elected for the long deferred hostile

Promptly at 6 o'clock a. m. the friends of the two combatants, together with the principals, stood face to face. Elam's party had traveled ten or fifteen miles that morning, but appeared in excellent spirits and impatient for the fight. Little time was lost in the adjustment of prelim inaries. The cartel had been agreed upon. It called for Colt's army sixes at eight paces. The command was to be : "Gentlemen, are you ready? Fire-one, two, three." Shots were to be exchanged after the word "fire" and before the word "three." After the first fire the challenger was to say whether or not he was satisfied. If not, then at the same command the men were to empty another barrel each and continue until the six loads were exhausted. Either had the privilege of advancing. At a few minutes after 6 o'clock the ground was measured off and the two men placed ir position Both seemed per-fectly composed. Several friends who were present, but not immediately connected with the affair, were asked to retire. They did so. In a moment the word came: "Gentlemen, are you ready? Fire. One, two, three." At the word "one" the reports from both pistols rung out on the clear morning air. When the smoke cleared away Elam and Beirne were discovered just as they had been placed. Neither had been touched. The challenger upon being questioned de-manded another fire. The demand was readily acceded to.

Elam Struck in the Right Thigh. Again the word was given and at "one" the explosion of the two cartridges came almost simultaneously. Beirne stood perfectly still. Elam went a step or two forward and was caught by his seconds, and gently raised from the ground. The ball had entered his right thigh nearly at the hip. The probe was introduced by the attending surgeon, but it failed to reach the lead. Elam insisted that he had been shot through both legs, but when told that the pain in the left leg was from sympathy, he declared that had he known Acts at the same time on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels.

Beirne, however, is a famous shot, and a man who has never been accused of want of courage. On the field his face was pale, but there were no signs of nervousness, and as he took aim his arm was steady and every movement showed deliband every movement showed deliberation. There is a general feeling of relief that the long suspense is over with no worse consequences. The affair, how-ever, may not end here. Bierne's article, out of which the difficulty grew, was not directly personal, but was intended as an insult to the whole Readjuster party. It s by no means certain that other mem bers of that organization will not seek an bers of that organization will not seek an opportunity to vindicate the party.

Soon after Elam accepted Beirne's first challenge he placed his resignation as secretary of the commonwealth in the hands of a friend to do with it as he thought proper. It is probable that it has reached the governor before this and been accepted. Under the laws of Virginia due to the secretary and no one who has Dispatches have been received from every section of the commonwealth inquiring about the result of the duel. These have come from the political and personal friends of both sides. The result will make Elam the nominee of his party for governor in 1885. He is already head and shoulders above almost any man in TRYING TO KILL A SCHOOL TEACHER. Attacked by a Man Whom He Whipped in School Tweive Years Ago.

In Covington Ky., an attempt was made by Edward Wittick to kill Prof. George A. Yates, the principal of a public school and an old teacher. The affair occurred on the corner of Main and Riddle streets. Wittick is about 26 years old and has just returned on a visit from the by roads. He was in a covered bug-gy, and had to exercise the same caution When he met Prof. Yakes on the street he rushed at him with a brickbat in each hand and exclaimed :

"Yes, sir, I am." "Well, you whipped me twelve years ago, and I've had it in for you ever since." Wittick then threw the pieces of bricks at Prof. Yates, who dodged them, and then walked ac oss the street to avoid trouble. He was followed by Wittick, who clinched with the professor and threw him down, but did not then strike him. The professor succeeded in getting up, and again attempted to escape, but Wittick seized a brick and pursued. A friend of both parties interposed and prevented a collision, but only for a short time. Wittick sprang like a tiger at the professor and knocked him down with a blow from a brick he held in his hand. Here several persons interposed and put an end to the fight. Prof. Yates was severe ly hurt about the head. Wittick went home, and late in the evening a policeman went to arrest him, and found him there with a butcher's knife in one hand, a crust of bread in the other. walking up and down the room. At the command of the policeman he dropped the knife, but said that if he had had a knife at the time of the assault, he would have cut Yates' eyes out, and he would get him yet. No arrest has been made for the present on the ground that Wittick's friends attribute the act to in sanity, symptoms of which, they say, he has shown since his return from Chatta-
