The Early Feach and the Green Apple.

Burlington Hawkeye. The Early Peach came to a place where four roads met. He slapped his chest with his stem and looked to the east and the south. "Bismilah !" be cried, "I am the boss, and I drive the Ambulance." The little Green Apple came down the long road from the west and heard him. He bowed to the north and he bowed to the west. "I am the son of the Clyclone," he shouted, "and I travel with my own private Coroner." "By the camel of Mahomet," said the Early Peach, " I am the friend of the sexton, and I can knock you out in four rounds, Marquis of Tewksbury rules." "Come to the wake," shrieked the little Green Apple, " and you may call me the harmless paw paw of the wilderness if cannot double up the man who anted you." Then they looked down the four long roads and waited for some one to practice on. From the east came a fair young girl from Vassar college, and up from the South came a gray haired African. " Take you the fair student?" said the Early Peach. " Not I," said the little Groen Apple. " I didn't come here to attempt impossibilities. For nearly four years that girl has sat at surreptitious midnight lunches; she has broken up a score of young men with her ice cream bills, and still she is hungry. But I will stand aside and give you a chance at the African." "I am not on the suicidal lay this morning," said the Early Peach. "I know him and already since yestereven's sun there have reposed beneath his untroubled vest a peck and a half of my brethren, and he is even now famished. He is known as the destroyer of watermelons, and all my tribe fear him. Allah is great, but some things are impossible." So they let let many people pass by unharmed-the old, the tough, the wary and the well seasoned. But
