WHIPPED AT A HOTEL TABLE.

An Irjured Wife Takes Her Kevenge With a Whip at Manhat an Beach and Marrs

The waiters at Manhattan Beach were very busily employed Saturday evening, when, about 7 o'clock, a young lady, escorted by a stately looking gentleman, entered the large dining room. She was attired in white, with ribbons in strong contrast and with a rich display of laze and claborate trimmings. The lady carried herself right royally, She glanced rather haughtily about her as the waiter drew back her chair, resigned her parasol to her escort as if she were doing him signal service, and being finally seated assumed as air of languid and superb in dently nearly twice her age and there was and shipped. It is thought the danger in no mistake as to his devotion. The pair over proceeded to discuss as good a supper as the bill of fare afforded, when another lady made her appearance on the scene. There are excellent reasons for believing that the newcomer was the gentleman's wife. Her eyes wandered about the dining room until they rested on the young lady and her friend. She made her way very quietly over to the table where they were seated and before anyone could appreciat: what was going on had drawn a riding whip from her pocket. The gentleman sprang from his seat with a look of dismay, but he was too late to save the girl. Three, four times the riding whip whistled in the air, one vicious stroke leaving a scarlet streak across the young lady's face. It was all the gentleman could do to get the ladies parted, and the moment she was free the owner of the dashing hat hurried out, with all of her imperiousness gone her feathers crumpled and her dress dis-ordered. The little episode had taken up less than a minute stime, but the excitement which it caused was of much longer duration. The lady with the whip struggled so fiercely to get free from the gentleman's grasp that she finally succeeded. In a moment she disappeared in the direction taken by the young woman. The prompt interference of a Manhattan Beach policeman saved a second whipping. He threatened refuge in the ladies' waiting room. How ceeded in meeting each other again is a mystery, but they were seen to get upon a train together while the assailant wandered about the piazza, as if in search of them. the parties failed.
