The Turnip Crop. Germantown Telegraph At this season of the year, when th time is approaching when we are to think of providing the ground for the the turnip crop, we like to say something on the subject. It is too early to sow but it is not too early to set apart the yet, but it is not too early to set apart the tield intended for the crop. The varieties generally sown are the Early Flat Dutch, the Purple Top, the Bloomsdale Pomeranian Globe, or the Yellow Aberdeen. For commercial purposes, it is rare that turnips can be raised to much profit unless one is in the regular market garden ing business. They cannot be put in as a regular farm crop, to be taken to market by farmers, and yet make as much of them as can be done on potatoes and yet it is so useful a vegetable for home use among cattle, that a turnip patch is extremely satisfactory in everybody's ground. There has not been much improvement in the turnip for many years, and hence there is no great choice of varieties. Per haps the kind we have are good enough, and may be regarded as at least among the best. In most other vegetables we want them as large as we can get them or as early as they will come. But extra toms: Intense itching, particularly after getlarge turnips are not desirable; and if one can sow turnip seed the middle or end of crawling in or about the rectum. Small lumps August and pull in October, it is sufficient to satisfy the earliest longings. Besides, it is found, perhaps in no vegetable so much as in the turnip, that it is culture quite as much as variety which makes both earliness and flavor. The right kind of rich ground will make a turnip bulb to an incredibly short space of time; and the root in such cases becomes so tender and sweet that some will eat them raw as readily almost as they would eat an apple. The right kind of manure is that which is thoroughly well-decomposed. If fresh stable manure is employed for the turnip, we get an enormous growth of foliage and small growth of root. In many plants the sign of a good root is abundant foliage but not in the turnip by any means A moderate top-growth is much more favor-England, where the turnip is universally fertilizer for the turnip. Here we find that a piece of ground heavily manured for some spring crop, and which has been taken off in time, is in a better condition for a good crop of turnips than the best manure immediately applied at sowing time. Where it can be made to suit, there is nothing so good a preparer for turnips as the potato.

There is one thing worth remembering that is, that the turnip is a great exhauster of the soil. Many persons, who find at this season that they have little pieces of ground with nothing in it, think that as the turnip comes in so soon they may as to good account. But if otherwise, they will not "pay for their feed " and it is much better to be without them.
