SIGNIFICANT SPRING.

L Dissertation Upon Its Advent, and its freet Upon Mankind.

The green leaf of the new come Spring."
—Shak. Everybody recognizes spring, when it is once upon us, but many persons are not la-mi lar with the exact date of its appearance. Webster, the world renowned lexicographer, gives us a definition, which may not be inappropriate here. 'Spring," says he, "is the season of the year when plants begin to vegetate and rise; the vernal season, comprehend ing the months of March, April and May, in the middle latitudes north of the equator."

Thompson, in his "Seasons," and Shaks peare in many of his works, have, perhaps, no eers in describing it, and yet "etheria spring" is freighted with malaria, " that inddious toe, lurking in the very air we reathe." It spreads over the fairest portions f our land; brings death and ulseas: to thousands; cuts off scores and : cores of our children and youth, as well as those in advanced life. A pestilence is regarded with 1.ttle less app: chension, and people every-where are asking, "What is it?" "Where does it come from?" "What will cure it?"

KIDNEY-WORT AS A SPRING MEDICINE. When you begin to lose appetite-have a headache, a pain in your side, back and shoulders—to toss about at night in restles dreams—wake in the morning with a foul mouth and furred tongue—teel disinclined to the only Southern state that made a bid go about your work, heavy in body and op- was Louisiana, which purchased 5,000 of pressed in mind-havea fit of the blues-when your urine gets scanty or high colored—to sufier with constipation, diarrhœa, or indiges tion—have a pasty, sallow face, duil eyes and blotched skin-one or all of these common complaints will certainly be evidences that your liver is disordered, torpid, or perhaps iseased. BUCHANAN'S BIOGRAPHY SOME THINGS IT MAKES PLAIN.

The Eve of the Rebellion -The Alleged Transfer of Arms to the South-the President's Good Faith.

In his biography of the fifteenth president, Mr. George Ticknor Curtis is not, of course, content with defining and defending Mr. Buchanan's view of the relation of the federal government toward a seceded state, or of the duties which, at such a juncture, devolved upon the executive authority. He is also at much pains to WILL PREVENT the CHOLERA. meet each of the charges which, as public opinion became more embittered at the North, were made against Mr. Buchanan by those who desired to palliate their own short-comings, or to account for the dis couraging results of the war by impeaching the loyalty of Mr. Lincoln's predeces sor. It will be found that Mr. Curtis is completely successful in the task of ex culpation so far as the proof of good in tentions is concerned, though it may be thought that one of the mistakes commit ted by the outgoing administration, viz., the neglect in forwarding reinforcements to Fort Sumter, although unquestionably due to honorable motives, betrayed a want of perspicacity, of a power to measure the imminence of danger, on the part of the agents whose judgment was relied upon by the chief magistrate. One of the most explicit and grievous imputations on Mr. Buchauan's good faith was formulated in November, 1863, by Ger. Scott, by whom it has been justly said that when he approached an inkstand it was his foot, and not his pen that he put in it. At the date mentioned, however, when the people of the North were smart ing under a series of unexpected defeats. and were casting about for scapegoats and for plausible explanations of their discomfiture, there were thousands who gave ear to the calumnious story set affort by Gen Scott, although the slight substratum of fact which underlay his statement had been carefully scrutinized by an unfriendly committee of the House of Representatives almost two years before. Gen. Scott alleged in this letter that Secretary Floyd removed-and the implication was that the step was taken by the order or with the connivance of the president-" $115, 000 extra muskets and ritles, with all their implements and ammunition, from Northern repositories to Southern arsenals, so that on the breaking out of the maturing rebellion they might be found without cost, except to the United States, in the most convenient positions for distribution among the insurgents. So, too, of the 140 pieces of heavy artillery which the same secretary ordered from Pittsburg to Lake Borgne, and Galveston in Texas for forts in March that under this posthumous Secretary Holt, acting for Secretary Cameron, just in time to defeat the robbery.'

that part of this statement is obviously false, and that much of the rest is tainted with the least creditable form of prevari cation, the suggestio falsi, or imputation of a corrupt motive for an act indisputably innocent. All the facts bearing on this subject were brought out by an inquiry ordered by the House of Representatives on Dec. 31, 1860 and embracing the following queries, viz: What arms had been sold; what arms had been distributed to the states; what arms had been sent for storage in Southern arsenals, of the United States; and finally, what ordnance had been transferred from Northern arsenals of the United States to Southern forts?" Touching the first subject of investigation the committee ascertained and reported that in the spring of 1859 50,000 muskets, condemned by the inspecting officers, "as unsuitable for the public service," were duly offered for sale under the act of March 3, 1825. Here, then, about a year before Mr. Lincoln's nomination, as Mr. Buchanan dryly pointed out in the course of the controversy into which Gen. Scott had forced him, the cotton states, which are alleged to have thus early meditated rebellion, lost a precious opportunity to buy a lot of discarded firearms. In reality, these condemucd muskets and finally took

Mr. Curtis finds it easy to demonstrate

With regard to the second inquiry bear ing on the quantity of arms distributed among the states and territories since Jau. 1, 1860, the committee reported that the whole number of muskets apportioned among the states, North and South, was 8,422. These were army muskets of the best quality, but neither Arkansas, Delapossess less force than they frequently merit.
The cause of this condition of popular skepTexas received one of them, because these Texas received one of them, because these states would not take the trouble to ask for the quotas to which they were entitled. The other slave states, which did apply for their allotments, received in the agprove all their assertions, touching the merits gregate 2,091 of these army muskets, or less than one fourth of the whole quantity fore, that Kidney-wort is a specific for just distributed. Mr. Curtis goes on to show such disorders as have been mentioned in this from the report of the committee that of long range rifles of the army calibre all the states received in 1860 only 1,728, of which just 758 fell to the slave states. In Dr. R. K. Clark, a regular physician of ex-tensive practice in Grand Isle County, and a collectively, obtained a less number of other words, the eight Southern states. worthy deacon of the Congregational Church, improved muskets and rifles than would be required to properly equip two regi ments. In relation, next, to the old arms alleged to have been transferred to the Southern arsenals of the United States, election of Mr. Lincoln, and several months before his nomination, the secretary of war ordered one fifth of the old flint-lock and percussion muskets to be removed from the Springfield armory in Massachusetts to five Southern arsenals of the United States for storage. This perfectly regular and proper order was carried out by the ordnance bureau in the usual course of administration, without reference to the president, 105,000 of these flint-lock and percussion muskets, which were in every way inferior to the new president, according to Mr. Weed, proposed to comply with this demand, but was prevented from doing so by the indiguant protest of Mr. Stanton, Mr. Black, Mr. Holt and Gen. Dix. How much ground there was for this story is shown by a letter from Secretary Black, one of the members of the cabinet alleged to have taken part in the patriotic demonstration. In the first place, it was not in Fabruary, but in December, that tary of war ordered one fifth of the old demonstration. In the first place, it was rifled muskets then manufactured for the United States army, being gradually trans ferred to the Southern arsenals. There were also transferred under the same were also transferred under the same order 10 000 of the old percussion rifles.

the Union to a zealous supporter of the secession movement. The committee of the House of Representatives report that this order was issued without the knowl-edge of Mr. Buchanan, who first heard of it six or seven days after it was given; meanwhile Secretary Floyd had been called upon to resign in consequence of discoveries seriously affecting his official intregrity and on the very day, December 29, when Mr. Holt, the new secretary of war, entered upon the duties of his office, the latter was directed by the presi-dept to rescind the order relating to the transfer of ordnance. With this trans-action Gen. Scott had absolutely nothing to do; although in 1862 he pretended that he had discovered in March, 1861, something that really happened in December, 1860, and that, by communicating this precious information to Secretary Holt, he had caused the issuing of an order which in fact had been given and obeyed two months earlier. Gen. Scott chose to regard the error in dates as immaterial, but impartial men will hardly fail to recognize a trace of malice in the blunder. since the inevitable and doubtless intended interence from Scott's language was that Mr. Buchanan had permitted his administration to expire, leaving in force this posthumous order of Secretary Floyd to do its harmful work after Mr. Lincoln's accession. Time, as Mr. Curtis says, was of the essence of this charge against the Buchanan administration, for Gen. Scott had imputed to the outgoing president a delay of more than two months in countermanding a mischievous order, and claimed for himself the whole merit of the discovery and countermand. There was another matter as to which t can be shown that Gen. Scott's memory was strangely at fault in 1862. He then verred that President Buchanau had re used to allow any attempt to be made to reenforce Fort Sumter, because he was best medicines of the world, and you will find that HOP BITTERS have the best curative lina commissioners, and "that afterward qualities and powers of all concentrated in Secretary Holt and myself (Gen. Scott) for the purpose, and were finally obliged endeavored in vain to obtain a ship of war of these singly or combined, fail. A thorough to employ the passenger steamer Star of the West." The facts are, as Mr. Curtis is able to demonstrate, that the South Carolina commissioners arrived in Washington on Dec. 27; that on Dec. 30 they received the president's answer rejecting their propositions; that on the same day Gen. Scott's request for permission to send reenforcements to Fort Sumter was made to the president, and that on December 31, the orders for the sloop of war Brooklyn to sail were in Gen. Scott's hands. A few days afterward, the substitution of the Star of the West for the stitution of the Star of the West for the Brooklyn was made in compliance with Gen. Scott's advice. The further charge brought forward by Gen. Scott in 1862, that Mr. Buchanan was trammelled not erected. Accidentally learning early 1862, that Mr. Buchanan was trammelled order the shipment of those goods had little foundation, though there was a pretext for it, which will be found revealed with entire candor in this narrative. It is certain-and Gen. Scott from his official position could hardly fail to know-that no truce or armistice was entered into by the president or anybody embracing the two harbors of Charleston and Pensacola. With regard to Pensacola, indeed, there was a special arrangement in no way connected with the state of things in Charleston, and the result of this arrangement was that Fort Pickens remained in the possession of the federal government. With reference to Charleston, on the other hand, there was only a temporary agreement between Major Anderson and Gov. Pickans, made without the president's knowledge and terminable on a certain event, viz, upon the receipt of instructions by Major An-derson from his government. We may here remark that Mr. Curtis makes it manifest that the person really chargeable with the failure to reinforce Fort Sumter was Major Anderson himself, who from the date of his removal from Fort Moultrie up to the writing of the letter received on March 4, 1861, continually pronounced the position perfectly secure, and expressed the hope that no attempt would be made to throw in supplies. The private letters written by Mr. Buchavan to members of his cabinet, and printed in this biography, prove how astounded and incensed he was to learn from Major Anderson's extraordicary dispatch received at the war department on March 4, that Fort Sumter could not be held without a force of 15,000 or 20,000 men to destroy the batteries which, under Major Auderson's eyes had been erected around it. It must be remem bered that Major Anderson had regularly and frequently reported the progress o the batteries which were being raised around him, but he had never said a word which could be construed as a suggestion that these works compromised his safety. No wonder that the declaration, abruptly made by the major in the beginning of March, that he would not be willing to risk his reputation on an attempt to re tain possession of Charleston harbor, with out a large military force, took the war

During the same year, 1862, in which department by surprise.

Gen. Scott saw fit to print a tissue of misstatements in the National Intelligencer, Mr. Thurlow Weed published in the London Observer a curious letter, which was immediately copied and extensively circulated in this country. Mr. Weed asserted that four members of Mr. Buchanan's cabinet had, by a threat of resig nation, compelled the president to recede from something he proposed to do. According to this edifying document, Major Anderson, in February, 1861, trans ferred his garrison to Fort Sumter, where upon Secretary Floyd declared that unless the major was remanded to Fort Moultrie, he should resign the war office. The president, according to Mr. Weed, pect for the president, and that neither he nor Mr. Holt ever spoke to Mr.

Buchanan about resigning upon any contingency whatever before the incoming of the new administration.
