MITCHELL, THE PRIZE FIGHTER.

With the Manner of an English Gentleman A short time ago two young ladies of the highest fashion and their mother were starting from New York to Newport by the evening boat. The air was warm and fine, and the passengers were on the upper deck enjoying the breeze. Among them was a young Englishman whose nationality was evident from his appearant of the second of the ance and accent. He was dressed in the highest style of the London mode, and, though without beard or moustache, his figure was of remarkably athletic build, and great coils of muscles showed under his well fitting coat. Directly the party spoken of came near where he was sitting, and, with unusual politeness in an Eng-lishman, he rose and offered the eldest of the ladies his chair, and hunted up seats for the others. Glancing at him, and observing his well kept appearance and manner of a gentleman, the youngest of the ladies, after thanking him for courtesy, commenced a conversa-Sc-and So, and the young man said he did; that he had met the nobleman in question frequently at the gymnasium. The inquiries went on. The young gentleman seemed to know nearly all the nobility, but none of the ladies, their wives or sisters. Visions of a great lord traveling incog. possessed the girls. How they would triumph over the others in having met him first! Being asked how long he meant to be at Newport, the young man replied that he did not know. He only came on a brief visit; having never been there he wished to see the place before going home. He was then asked if he was intending to visit any one? He said no; that he had no acquaintances in the place. The young ladies then began to assure him that society at Newport was very charming indeed. The young man said in a well bred way that he had no doubt of it, but that as he had no friends there he could hardly expect to be presented to its fascinations. The conversation ran along, and late in the evening, when he rose to say good night, the mother said to him that he had been extremely polite to herself and daughters, and trusted they might have the pleasure of returning his courtesy by receiving him at their cottage. The young fellow blushed, smiled a little, and said if his time permitted he would avail himself of their courtesy. And so they parted, the ladies not even knowing his name, So sure were they that he was at least a nobleman that they had really asked him to their house without even knowing who he was. Several days after the youngest daughter, who had been greatly impressed young people in a coach, the driver of by the Englishman, was out with some which was a well known young man of wealth in New York. Coming up along the cliffs the party got out, and were observing one of the finest sea views in America, when they saw standing near them a stranger who had not yet seen the party. Turning to leave, the stranger saw the young lady he had met on the boat. ordially, and he hesitating a little, gracefully returned the salutation. The driver of the coach was amazed "Why," said he to her, "do you know him?" "Oh yes," she glibly answered "he is a charming young gentleman who came down with us, and made himself very agreeable." "Well," said he, "do you know his name?" She said she did not. "Then let me tell you who it is. That is Charles Mitchell, the prize fighter, the champion of all England." Mitchel looks more like a life guardsman than : pugilist. In fact there is nothing of the shoulder-hitter in his appearance or manner, and he is a man of time education and the Prince of Wales has had him at luncheon more than once.

Two afternoons after this meeting the ladies before mentioned were on their piazza, when the young man came up the walk. The one who had met him had not said a word of her adventure, so the others were in perfect ignorance of the meeting on the cliff. The mother greeted him cordially, as did the elder daughter. He glanced at the other girl. Her face was crimson, but she did not come for ward and speak to him. Looking at her a moment with a half smile contempt he said: "Madame, could not leave without acknowledging your very polite attention in inviting me to your house when you did not even know my name I am a gentleman, however, though just now I am not in what you call society. My father is a clergymau of the English church and in good standing, and his name is Mitchell.' Well, Mr. Mitchell," said the mother with a smile, "why are you not in so-ciety?" "Because I am at present a prize fighter," said he gravely. With a quick wit that did her credit, the lady answered, "That is a sufficient reason. If I had known that, of course, I should not have asked you to my house. But now that you are here, pray sit down." (He had been standing all the time.) "No," said he, "I have done my errand;" and he bowed to the ladies who had spoken to him, and without a glacce at the other went away.

REOWN'S IRON BITTERS.

In olden times it was thought hat evil spirits came in through cracks and keyholes The generally approved way to keep them out was to plug up the keyholes and stop the cracks with cotton. Notwithstanding these preventive measures, the evil things had their wn way and often came in as they pleased.

So comes malaria now-a-days. We try to keep it out of the key-hole and it comes in by the crack. We stop up the crack, and lo! it comes from a leak in the plumbing, or an opening from some neglected drain, or from some unsuspected source and unguarded direction.

We cannot always keep maiaria out, but we can give it battle and drive its effects from our systems. If Brown's Iron Birrers is taken in time, malaria has not a ghost of a chance This is the great family medicine. Your druggist cells it and you ought to keep a bottle in the augl8 lwd&w
