An English Gun on an Embankment. A car of the Great Train South, on the Port Deposit railroad, was wrecked north of Odontoro at 1 o'clock yesterday. A broken axle caused the trouble. On their road down to clear away the wreck, the Columbia wreckers met with a serious accident. The engine, No. 174, struck a large rock which had slipped upon the embankment from the hill, and jumped from the track. After running a thousand yards on the ties and ballast the engine and tender fell over a high embankment. The engineer, Frank Steinheiser, Elmer E. Freeman, fireman, Wm. J. Meade, and Dispatch Strickler were over with them, but escaped with slight injuries. Great excitement prevailed in the cabin car, where some 25 or 30 wreckers were at the time, but it subsided as soon as the car resumed its way. The extent of the damage was seen. The train was moving at the rate of 25 or 30 miles an hour when it struck the rock. The track to be fully repaired. All travel over the road was delayed until this morning.
