BENSON'S POROUS PLASTERS.

LOG ROLLING.

While Wrestling With a Fallen Tree a Lumberman Receives Consequential Damages.

While on a hunting excursion in the great coal and wood region near Carbondale, Pa., the writer met William Coll, a lumberman. Accustomed to life and labor in the forest from early manhood he was a true Knight of the Axe. Many a tree had fallen before his ringing strokes and fleets of rafts had borne away to market the sawed products. Coll is a character and if Oscar Wilde is right in saying that all movements in unhindered labor are graceful, our friend William, stripped for his work, and attacking a tree as Richard I. assaulted the heavy doors of Front de Boeuf's Castle, must have presented an admirable picture.

One day however—but let him tell the story himself, as he told it to me:

"I was out in the woods, you know, trying to start a log down a hill. Thinking I could get a better purchase on it from the lower side, I tackled it there with my log-rolling hook and threw my weight on the lever. She started, she as luck would have it, before I could get out of the way, she rolled right over me. If it hadn't been for a lot of small limbs and brush tying in the road, which lifted her up, she'd a crushed me flat. As it was I got up without a broken bone, but with some mighty bad bruises.

"Then you were all right," said his auditor.

"Not by a blamed sight, stranger. I took cold, rheumatism set in and, if I hadn't heard of BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS and used 'em, it's my opinion I should never have made another chip fly. But the capcine took hold quick, and I'm 'bout as good as new. But there's one thing you kin calkilate on—I shall never wrastle with another log unless I have the advantage of the ground. For, as I told you before, if it hadn't been for them brushes I'd been smashed so, you could 'a sold me for a door mat."

The Capcine is the thing for rheumatism. It doesn't keep you waiting. The word CAPCINE is cut in the centre of the genuine. Price 25 cents.

KING OF THE CRACKERS.

A STUDY OF NATIVE LIFE IN FLORIDA.

A Rich Cattle Owner—An Original Character—Fighting Indians and Alligators—Hoeing the Garden and Watering the Mule.

Tribune's Florida Correspondence.

The Floridan who is called the "King of the Crackers," is one of the richest cattle owners in the state; one of its most eccentric characters; and the first American baby born in Florida after the state was ceded to the United States government by the Spaniards in 1819. His father lived in Alachua county, close down by the Indian line.

"Many a hundred times," as he told me, the boy "Jake" saw young Oscola, who as a boy and man was most proficient at these games of running and jumping, shooting and wrestling, and all manly sports. Osceola was chosen as king of all the petty chiefs of his tribe; his mother was daughter of the old king and his father was said to have been a white man. When I asked the "King of the Crackers" what he remembered of the young chief's looks he said:

"He was a noble lookin' man. He hadn't the high cheek bones most Injuns have, nor little varminty eyes. He wa'n't a pooty Injun, but he was manly lookin' and tall and straight, and you felt a sort of an awe of his presence you couldn't shake off."

At the breaking out of the Indian war in 1835 all the friendly Indians were changed to warriors and braves. "Jake" was then a lad of sixteen. Once during this war the sound of sheep bells saved his life; and once an old deer hound saved the lives of over a thousand people. This was the way of it:

A Narrow Escape.

"Jake's" father, having fought the Creek Indians in Georgia, knew that he must place his wife and children in a safer shelter than the isolated homestead. He bundled them all into wagons and set out for a settlement called Newmansville. Other families were pouring into it from every quarter; and there were soon between one and two thousand people suddenly gathered together where only a few families had lived before. Food became scarce. The men had to work hard to build defences around the town. They dug a trench and made a wall of logs fifteen feet high and double—a log behind each crack in the logs before—and at this work they labored day and night. They needed to be well fed. But there was no way to get supplies unless a man took his life in his hand and made a stolen trip to his deserted home with its smoke house and its sweet potato patch. "Jake's" father decided to do this. He took another son and "Jake" and the three rode away together, each intending to bring back all his horse could carry. It was after dark when they entered their home. There was a "bank" of sweet potatoes in the yard. They found plenty of meat in the smoke house, and there was corn in the barn, besides all the cotton they had picked that year. Corn meal and bacon and potatoes would make a splendid booty to carry back, and they pucked up as much as they dared, knowing that possibly they might have to ride for their lives going home.

They loaded their horses and tied them close to the house, and then as there were some hours to wait before the time when it would be best to start back, the boys threw themselves down on the floor and went to sleep. But the father watched. He knew that the Indians had threatened to burn his house, and wondered that it had been spared so long. But the crafty enemy had been waiting for just such an occasion as this when he should be tempted to come back to it, and even now they knew that he was there and were creeping up on him, intending to kill him and his boys and destroy his house all at one stroke. But suddenly through the stillness of the midnight a sound broke on his ear—a sheep bell.

"Up, boys, and out! The Indians are on us!" he cried; for the sheep were rushing towards the sheep pen, following their frightened leader, and he knew by the way they ran to their shelter that they had been startled by the approach of men. In a moment all three were in their saddles riding for dear life, seeking hollows of thick wooded places and obscure, unknown paths for safety. But they were not out of sight when the glow of the burning dwellings lit the sky, and though they got safely into the fortifications the Indians took a terrible vengeance upon the harmless animals that had given them warning. There were more than a hundred sheep. They penned up the bleating creatures and one by one they skinned them alive! From some they tore wide belts of fleece; others they left with bodies covered but with legs stripped; some had their helpless heads and faces skinned. All died in horrible suffering, tortured by insects and birds of prey before dying.

Good Work of a Little Cannon.

As the hot summer went on there were sickness and death in the fortified village behind the tall logs; and as the Indians seemed to have deserted that part of the country, the times were changed. Mothers carried their sick babies outside of the walls and camped and cooked in the shade of the trees, only returning inside when darkness came. Day after day the fort was thus emptied. Old men and boys, who were the sole defence of the place, went to hunt wild turkeys or other game; and all rested in a careless sense of security. So it was that one day "old man Pendarvis" went out to see if he could kill a deer, and followed a narrow stream shaded by trees, where deer came to drink. Suddenly his old dog stopped with a peculiar growl and Pendarvis, noting him, crept cautiously forward until he saw two or three Indians, armed, naked, and painted with war-paint, creeping up to the stream.

He hastened back to give the alarm, and a wild scene followed, women shrieking and rushed to the fort, carrying sometimes other persons' babies, picked up by mistake in the flurry. Men were bewildered and panic struck, they were but three hundred old men and boys, and there were the lives of a thousand women and children at stake. The old deer hound had done his part; he had warned his master, and his master had outstripped the enemy by a few minutes, else the Indians would have surprised them completely and massacred the last soul; for it was Osceola and five hundred braves who were creeping up that brook!

Carpenter Horn—a man that couldn't be idle—in his leisure hours and had made wheels and mounted a little old cannon that had been thrown aside by some troops travelling south. A bushel of six pound balls had been left with it, and this cannon he took charge of and wheeled into place when the Indians made their first dash at the fort. The first shot from it killed two Indians. It was a terrible surprise to the attacking party. They knew all about guns, but a cannon they had never heard of, and its power and its noise so overwhelmed them that some of them fled at the mere sound. But others charged, and there was a fierce battle, which the cannon and Carpenter Horn finally won.

"Medicine Worth Its Price."

Perhaps I had better say, just here, that while the "crackers" in Georgia and other Southern states are are poor white people, and get their name from harvest labors, corn shucking, or "corn cracking," the Florida "cracker" is a cow boy, cattle owner or cattle dealer; and some of these men attain considerable wealth. They take their name from the art they have of cracking a long leather whip, which sounds like a gun shot at half a mile's distance.

"The King of the Crackers," tell's with much enjoyment a story of a troop of "regular" United States soldiers encamped in the Florida hammockland during the Indian war. They were resting at night after a march in this wild jungle-like country, when suddenly a strange trumpeting note was heard. "That's a tiger! That's the way they call their mates!" exclaimed one. Intense alarm prevailed. No one dreamed that it was only an owl hooting. Then an old alligator bellowed. "That's a lion roaring!" some one else declared. Then came a volley of sharp quick sounds. "Thim's muskits, byes!" said a little Irish sergeant, springing up. "The Indians is fightin' through the woods, an' they'll be at us in a twinklin'!"

But it was only a party of cow boys herding up their cattle, and the fame of that night's terrors went abroad and mightily amused the crackers.

A Contented Career.

"Jake" who could ride a horse and crack a whip when he was seven years old, when he was a young man could wield a whip eighteen feet long, only eighteen inches of it in the handle. His father gave him some calves when he was a lad, and "Jake" prospered. Thousands of cattle belonged to him as he grew older, and year by year he sold thousands in Cuba, and made great profits on every ship load. The Spaniards regarded him with wonder—a man who couldn't be cheated, who wouldn't gamble, and who never drank. He bought lands and built wharves, he came to own houses and lakes, and groves of orange and lemon trees. Stories of his riches began to be repeated and he came to be called the "King of the Crackers"—a name which mightily pleases him. For he is proud of his early hardships and dangers; he dresses, lives, talks and trades as a poor man might, but he gives to the poor and defends the cause of the fatherless against the land sharks as only a rich man can.

Queer stories are told of him and other rich cattle dealers in South Florida. Credible witness state that in the rude log-cabins of these men uncounted wealth lies unconcealed. Many have seen the "King of the Crackers," in his blue shirt and rough trousers, paying out money from a peck of gold pieces heaped, on a rude pine table. Fat yellow Spanish doubloons, each gold piece worth more than $15, are bundled into a corn sack and left to lie in corner, or are stuffed into the sleeves of an old checked homespun shirt, or given by tin cupfull to a child to play with. Old cigar boxes, tin meat cans, old woollen socks, are favorite holders of money for the Florida cattle men. These articles will very probably be set on a rafter or poked into a chink behind a doorframe. None seem to take much care of mere money. They know some men are mean enough to steal calves and put on them the wrong brand, but who would be mean enough to steal dollars and cents?

Prouder of his nickname—or title—than of his money, the "King of the Crackers," who hoes his own garden and waters his pet mule with perhaps an ostentatious humility, makes his boast of lack of all pretences. "I'm nothin' but a cracker, don't you see?" he will say, pausing as he leads along the old white mule. "I don't try to ape the quality. I ain't worn a coat in twenty years. I ain't settin' up for a fine gentleman. My old blue trousers and my check shirt suits me—and a good pair of stout gallowses. Rain or shine, I don't want any more. My boys can dress up in store clothes, if it suits 'em—go to college—talk big; I'm goin' on jest this way till I drop in my tracks. I'm goin' to work when I please and play when I please, and be what I please—nothin' under the sun but a native born, sun baked old Florida cracker!"

A WOMAN'S AFFAIR.

MRS. N. H. SMALL, the wife of the popular deputy sheriff and assessor of Topsham, Me., writes us on May 15, 1883: "That she had been severely afflicted during several years with kidney and liver disease, accompanied with severe pains and backache. Having tried many so-called cures, and medicines, and doctor's prescriptions, without receiving any benefit, and while seeking for a cure, she noticed the advertisement of Hunt's Remedy and decided to try it. Having bought a bottle at Mr. Johnson's drug store, commenced using it with such flattering results that she continued its use, and after using only five bottles the improvement in her health is so marked that she wishes all who are afflicted in like manner to know of this most valuable and reliable medicine; and she most cheerfully recommends Hunt's Remedy to all, and especially to females who are troubled with the complaints peculiar to the sex."

A FAMILY BLESSING.

Under date of May 10, 1883, we have received the following information from MR. LORENZO LOMBARD, of 18 Charles street, Portland, Me. MR. LOMBARD says: "For several years past I have been troubled with severe backache and pains in the side, and when I would lie down I could not rest well, as it seemed impossible for me to get into an easy position; and my aches and pains increased constantly to such an extent that I became convinced that I had a disease of the kidneys fastened to me, and after having used doctor' prescriptions and many of the so-called cures without getting any benefit, I was persuaded by a near neighbor, Mr. Jones, to try Hunt's Remedy, as himself and wife had been greatly benefited by its uses, and many others of our acquaintances spoke of its merits in the highest terms. I decided to try it, and purchased a bottle at Nichol's drug store, and as soon as I had taken a few doses of it the pains in my back were relieved, and after taking three bottles my sideache and lame back are cured, and I can truly testify that Hunt's Remedy is an article of great merit, and will do all that is claimed for it, and I know of many other people in Portland who have found a cure in Hunt's Remedy after all others failed to do any good, and I recommend it to all who have kidney or liver disease, hoping that this may be the means of relieving some sufferer who does not know of the merits of Hunt's Remedy."
