BENSON'S POROUS PLASTERS.

LOG ROLLING.

White Wrestling With a Fallen Tree a Lumberman Receives Consequential Damages.

While on a hunting excursion in the great coal and wood region near Carbondale, Pa., the writer met William Coll, a lumberman. Accustomed to life and labor in the forest from early manhood he was a true Knight of the Axe. Many a tree had fallen before his ringing strokes and fleets of rafts had borne away to market the sawed products. Coll is a character and if Oscar Wilde is right in saying that all movements in unhindered labor are graceful, our friend William, stripped for his work, and attacking a tree as Richard I. assaulted the heavy doors of Front de Boeuf's Castle, must have presented an admirable picture.

One day however—but let Him tell the story himself, as he told it to me:

"I was out in the woods, you know, trying to start a log down a hill. Thinking I could get a better purchase on it from the lower side, I ran and let there with my log-rolling hook and threw my weight on the lever. She started, she did, but as luck would have it, before I could get out of the way, she rolled right over me. It hadn't been for a lot of small limbs and brush lying in the road, which lifted her up, she'd a crushed me flat. As it was I got up without a broken bone, but with some mighty bad bruises.

"Then you were all right," said his auditor.

"Not by a blamed sight, stranger. I took cold, rheumatism set in and, if I hadn't heard of BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS and used 'em, it's my opinion I should never have made another chip fly. But the capcine took hold quick, and I'm 'bout as good as new. But there's one thing you kin calkilate on:—I shall never wrastle with another log unless I have the advantage of the ground. Fur, as I told you before, if it hadn't been for them brushes I'd 'a been smashed so, you could 'a sold me for a door mat."

The Capcine is the thing for rheumatism. It doesn't keep you waiting. The word CAPCINE is cut in the centre of the genuine. Price 25 cents.

AN OUTRAGE.

COMPELLING SAILORS TO SHIP.

Drugging Them With Drink and Forcing Them on Vessels—A Desperate Resistance at Camden.

The railroad station at the foot of Federal street, Camden, was the scene of great excitement Tuesday. A steam tug had been noticed near the wharf for some time during the morning and her actions caused suspicion in the minds of the officials connected with the railroad and ferry companies, especially when eight or nine rough looking men dressed as sailors landed on the platform and kept an anxious lookout for the westward bound trains. Shortly after their landing the New York express came into the station and several sailors alighted, all evidently drunk or under the influence of some powerful drug, as their staggering gait testified. They were coached by a sandy moustached man, who is a sailors' boarding house runner from Philadelphia. The gang who had landed from the tugboat immediately led the sailors to the boat waiting to convey them to a vessel out in the Delaware, some distance down the river, said to be about to sail for the East Indies. Several of the sailors had got on board, when Patrick O'Niel, a powerful Irishman, refused to go, saying he had not signed papers and had received no advance money.

The whole of the crew then attacked him and knocked him down, but O'Niel held on the railing of the landing. One of the party struck O'Niel a blow over the head with a club, cutting the scalp open. Several of the ruffians then drew blackjacks and pounded O'Niel in the face, breaking his nose, besides knocking out several of his teeth and cutting his face. His cries were heard on board the ferry boat Wenonah, and the employes rushed off the deck as soon as they made a landing and went to the rescue. Seeing this, the miscreants jumped on board the tug, cast their lines loose and escaped.

Much indignation was felt Tuesday night because a party of railroad employes witnessed the affray and did not interfere in O'Niel's behalf. James Wilkinson, a prominent citizen, rushed to the man's rescue and was knocked down. He then took charge of the sailor, who explained that he and his comrades had been made drunk in New York on Monday night and knew nothing until they woke up in the Camden depot. O'Niel declares that a rope was thrown around his neck to drag him on board that nearly strangled him, but he managed to sever it with a jack knife. It is said that the same tug can be seen at the depot and that sailors are taken on board in the same manner nearly every week.

FIRING A TRAIN OF POWDER.

An Attempt to Burn a Building in Philadelphia Which Was Frustrated.

A patrolman discovered smoke issuing from the two story frame building 1824 Market street, Philadelphia, at a late hour on Monday night. He broke down the door and easily extinguished the flames, which had gained but little headway. An investigation revealed the fact that a well planned attempt had been made by an incendiary to fire the building. A roll of paper filled with powder was stretched along the floor, at the end of which stood a lighted candle. The powder train communicated with a mass of rags saturated with benzine, and the same fluid was plentifully scattered over the floor and partition. A number of filled coal cans were placed at another point and a parffine candle was found in a refrigerator. The building is occupied by Wilson & Son, wholesale meat merchants. Fire Marshal Wood says that the building contained but little stock and that the contents were insured for $600. The Wilsons satisfied the marshal that they were absent at the time of the fire. The block in which the fired structure stood is composed almost entirely of frame buildings and had the fire gained headway a serious conflagration must have ensued.

NORTHERN HOSPITALITY.

The Widow of Stonewall Jackson Tells About Her Recent Trip.

Mrs. Stonewall Jackson, who has returned to Charlotte, N. C., from her recent Northern trip, writes a card in reply to comments from the Southern press upon her accepting the hospitality of Gov. Ben Butler. She says: "While in Boston we were entertained at a hotel and did not cross the threshhold of Governor Butler. Justice compels me to say that he was wanting in no courtesy to the guests of his state. The people of Boston and of every point we visited in the North certainly gave evidence that my husband's name was held in such honor and reverence that my heart could not but be touched with tender and grateful emotion. I was told that they admired him for 'his moral grandeur, his exalted piety,' that he was the bravest man the war produced on either side and that they were proud of him as an American citizen, etc. Surely, there must be enough of chivalry and right feeling on the part of all true Southerners to cast no blame upon me for having been the means of evoking such sentiments as these, and while every instinct of my nature is loyalty and devotion to the South, I can testify that there are many excellent Christians at the North who are anxious to blot out all the sectional differences and extend to us the love and kindness which makes a nation that happy people whose God is love."

Mrs. Frank Leslie gives the following entertaining description of social customs in Madrid, Spain:

I was introduced into delightful circles in Madrid. One thing impressed me curiously, the manner in which the Spanish convert night into day. It is not at all unusual to invite one to dinner at 10 p. m. You cannot help wondering at what hour supper will be served. "Drop in and call on me," a lady said to me. "I cannot to-night," I said, "for I am going to a concert." "But come in afterward," she said; "no one thinks of coming in before 11 or 12 o'clock." I noticed all the ladies were taking to French bonnets and French costumes. French milliners and French dressmakers have invaded Spain. For all that I could see in the dresses of fashionable people, I might as well have been in New York. There was nothing national in the costume of anything but the countrymen whom you meet in the streets. Spanish politeness is without limit. A letter of introduction puts people all at your disposal, their horses and carriages, and they call on you, not one evening, but every evening.

I went to a private bull fight given to the king and court circle. It was the great bull ring, which resembles the Colosseum in Rome. The king was there, but he has very much changed. He appears at least ten years beyond his age, and he looks extremely pale and worn, and is very English or German in his appearance, and not at all Spanish. He wears his whiskers quite in the English fashion, with a closely shaven chin, light moustache, and mutton chop whiskers. He only rarely visits these bull fights. The gentlemen riders at the private fight were magnificently dressed, but were not, I understood, so expert as those who appear at the public bull fights, and it was therefore the more cruel. My sympathies were with the four legged brutes, rather than the two legged ones. It was the one thing I saw in Madrid which I took exception to, and it was indeed a sickening spectacle, especially when the gentlemen and ladies shouted "Kill him! Kill him!" It expressed me strangely to see little children taken to the fight. They would stand on their little feet, clap their hands, and be so delighted. They had but to turn their thumbs down, and one would have imagined oneself back in ancient Rome. When the fight was over the riders ranged themselves before the king like a lot of circus riders and were applauded.

The Corporation Tax Cases Settled.

The supreme court has affirmed every decision of Judges Simonton and McPherson in every one of the fifteen or twenty corporation tax cases appealed from the Dauphin county court. In every case but one the decision is in favor of the state and heavy judgments are recovered, notably from the Philadelphia & Reading railroad company, which is held for about $150,000 taxes on gross receipts while the company was in the hands of a receiver. Smaller judgments are given against the Southern mail steamship company and against other companies, a large number of them for license tax on foreign corporations. The Lehigh Valley railroad company, however, has gained the bond tax cases, involving directly about $149,000 and indirectly about $100,000 a year on the state's revenue.

Shooting Affray in a Church.

In the Baptist meeting house at Comanche, Texas, Sunday, after preaching, the congregation went to a creek to witness baptisms. Two brothers, Robert and William Butcher, remained in the church and got into a quarrel with one Harris. Robert received the contents of a shotgun carried by Harris and died instantly. William Butcher and Harris then struggled for possession of the gun and Harris was so badly beaten on the head that he may die. William Butcher was arrested. The origin of the trouble is not stated.

Mr Gresham and His Lotteries.

At Washington, Postmaster General Gresham said Tuesday afternoon that he had held a conference with President Baldwin, of the New Orleans national band, relative to money orders and registered letters for the Louisiana lottery company. No decision had been reached as yet with a view to the modification of the ruling of the department. Judge Gresham, it is understood, will consider a proposition made to him by Mr. Baldwin and announces his determination some time this week.
