THE EXPLOSIONS.

LONDON MUCH EXCITED OVER THEM

Further particulars of the affair--Laying the blame on the Fenians--Dr. Rossa's Opinions.

The excitement over the explosions on the underground railway in London Tuesday evening is very great. A large number of police were on duty all night at the various railway stations and guarding the lines. A heavy force was also employed watching the Houses of Parliament and other public buildings. The explosion at Charing Cross occurred at a distance of 200 yards west of the station. There was no train there at the time. The walls of the tunnel were battered, but the rails were not misplaced. The windows in the station were blown out. The roof was not damaged. No person was hurt there. At Praed street station the force of the explosion was terrible. Although workmen have been busily engaged all night in removing the debris they have not yet finished their task, nor has the damage at that place been repaired. The tunnel which destroyed, but a deep hole was excavated in the road bed, the brick work was blown out and the gas pipe and telegraph lines were broken. The refreshment saloon was wrecked and the windows of the other railway cars were engaged in the explosion occurred immediately under a passing train forty yards west of the station. All the persons injured were in the last two carriages of the train. It is now known that twenty-eight persons who were wounded were taken to Mary's hospital. Four of them are seriously hurt, but they passed a favorable night and are expected to recover. The others were able to go to their homes during the night. Both of the explosions occurred at about 8:10 o'clock in the evening.

All the available detectives of the Metropolitan police force were engaged in searching for the perpetrators of the outrage and the railway officials are assisting them. The police deny that any rocket cartridges have been found near the scene of the explosion. No traces have as yet been discovered of the nature of the explosives. It has been ascertained through that the explosion could not have been caused by coal gas. Major Majendie, of the board of trade, made an examination of the scene of the explosion at the Charing Cross station Wednesday morning, and an inspector from the home office made an examination at Praed street station. Subsequently he took a look at the damaged train. He expressed the opinion that cartridges made of the first order of explosives, such as gun cotton, were used by the traitors. The fact that a fragment of the train was lying out of a car window, just after the train left Praed street station, he saw some sparks nearly underneath the carriage and immediately afterwards heard the explosion. The explosion at Praed street station was small in quantity. It is not believed to have been dynamite.

Investigations made by scientific advisers to the war department have led to the conclusion that nitro-glycerine in some form was the agent used in both cases. Later inquiries confirm the early statement that a large number of people were injured. In addition to over thirty treated at the hospital a large number were attended by private surgeons. One of the victims, a corporal of Hussars, says he was talking with a friend on the train near Praed street, when there was suddenly a very bright flash, immediately followed by a terrible report. He was struck by something and almost knocked insensible. When the train arrived at Edgeware road he staggered across the platform and was picked up by a soldier. He remembers nothing more. This is only one of many similar narratives.

The police warned the railway officials three months ago that they had received advices from America of threatened explosions. Precarious were then taken to provide against them. The explosives used were powerful, but were in a limited quantity.

O'Donovan Rossa Says It Was the Work of the Fenian Brotherhood.

At New York, O'Donovan Rossa sat in his dingy office Wednesday afternoon, apparently in excellent humor. He was talking with a friend when the London explosion was spoken of. "Yes, I've been expecting this explosion in the tunnel. The Fenian Brotherhood did it. The good work goes only on. I will learn by mail just who was in this underground work and you will be ho for me at it. Ever since the Woolwich explosion we've been expecting it. Here's a dispatch we've just received about the Woolwich affair."

Here Mr. Rossa summoned his aide-camp and the latter produced a torn piece of newspaper, from which Mr. Rossa read as follows:

"DEAR JERRY: The second shot was fired yesterday in the heart of the enemy's camp."

"That is the dispatch," said he. "Another comes in tonight, but I can't tell you who sent it. It comes from a leader over there who is working the resources of civilization in behalf of unhappy Ireland. This work means the annihilation of England unless she lets Ireland go. The best thing she can do is to evacuate the island and let us govern Ireland. It is none of our business what form of government we would establish, but of course it would be a republic. Until Ireland is free you may expect more and more explosions. The explosion at London will help our cause. It will excite the hearts of English tyrants and teach them a lesson that they must learn. I am continually encouraging the men at home to strike England in England itself. Froude told us here in New York that we must bring England to her knees before she will give up Ireland. I and one of those who are willing to pay that price of Ireland's liberty and one of those who believe the Irish race are able to pay it. The explosions in Woolwich lately and this explosion now are only samples of what we are doing. London will be in ashes by Ireland, and if England will not give up Ireland it will be done, and more besides it will be done, 'tis continued, in an excited tone. "When I traveled through England twenty years ago I laid eyes on a hundred things that could be done to excite the hearts of English tyrants and teach them a lesson that they must learn. London will be in ashes by Ireland, and if England will not give up Ireland it will be done, and more besides it will be done, 'tis continued, in an excited tone. "When I traveled through England twenty years ago I laid eyes on a hundred things that could be done to excite the hearts of English tyrants and teach them a lesson that they must learn. I am continually encouraging the men at home to strike England in England itself. Froude told us here in New York that we must bring England to her knees before she will give up Ireland. I and one of those who are willing to pay that price of Ireland's liberty and one of those who believe the Irish race are able to pay it. The explosions in Woolwich lately and this explosion now are only samples of what we are doing.
