

Lancaster Intelligencer.

SATURDAY EVENING, NOV. 3, 1888.

State Surplus. The Republican managers feel it necessary to say something in excuse of the refusal of the two Republican members of the sinking fund board to vote for Secretary Stenger's resolution that the surplus be invested in state or United States securities as commanded by law.

Resolved, That the Farmers and Mechanics National Bank of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, be instructed as soon as possible to invest $1,945,763.43 in state bonds as a premium not exceeding the premium upon United States bonds, and if the same cannot be secured on or before the 1st of September, to purchase $200,000 United States bonds, and a like amount more thereafter, on further failure to purchase said state bonds, until the disposable surplus in the sinking fund is exhausted.

They knew at the time that the money could not be invested in state bonds at a premium not exceeding the premium upon United States bonds, and consequently their resolution provided really for an investment of $200,000 per month, after September first; and they have now bought $600,000 of United States bonds at a premium of $121,187.50; and $42,000 of state bonds at a premium of $7,895.50.

ATTEND the Democratic mass meeting tonight at Manchester hall and hear the reasons why the Republican party has outlived its usefulness. Should the Republicans plunk state out of the middle danger on Tuesday next, it will be in order for Cooper to write a treatise entitled "The Decline and Fall of the Constitution."

SENATOR MITCHELL would confer a great boon on our anxious constituents if he would emerge from obscurity long enough to tell us how his bill stands in relation to the law.

CLOSING IN.

THE END OF THE CAMPAIGN NEAR.

Speeches Made by Strong Democrats in Philadelphia and Lancaster. Mr. Stenger, Has something to say in answer to Stewart.

Yesterday the campaign was marked by a Democratic meeting in Philadelphia and in a dozen places throughout the state. In his speech yesterday in Philadelphia Mr. Stenger spoke in praise of Governor Pattison and his administration, and after explaining that he, the speaker, appeared simply as a spectator, he said: "I am not here, as Mr. Kelley was a few days ago, to talk of tariffs. That belongs to Congress. I am here to talk about William B. Ewing's theories."

What He Turns Out to Be. The campaign draws to a close with its issues well presented and well understood. Though it has not been an exciting canvass, there is a lively interest felt in the decision of its salient questions. The Republican party, it is believed, will be beaten upon the position it has taken on current questions within the year. It is not assailed upon old issues. Even the Cameron ghost is laid.

SENATOR MITCHELL would confer a great boon on our anxious constituents if he would emerge from obscurity long enough to tell us how his bill stands in relation to the law. He is a man of great ability, and his bill is one of the best ever introduced into the Pennsylvania legislature.

There are some people either too lazy to consider or too ignorant to comprehend the broad difference in the principles that underlie the two great parties of the country, and filled into a false sense of security they deem it of little consequence on which side their vote is cast. This is a fatal mistake, and it is to be hoped that this class contains few Democrats who are unable to give a reason for the faith that is in them.
