Not a Good Odor.

Henry B. Payne, of Cleveland, is a but as one interested in the Standard oil company, his son being a member, he which he aspires. The Standard is not and facts in the next few days. a sweet smelling corporation to the peo ple, and we do not think that the power of its money will ever be able to disguise its perfume. It is a corporation which is the Philadelphia newspapers as advance understood to have accumulated profits advertising by the author of a local drama of some seventy or eighty millions of to be produced by the Reading Dramatic dollars after a decade of manipulation of the oil trade, during which it almost achieved a monopoly of the production and refining of oil, and would have fully done so but for the opposition it met in Mr. Gowen and the Reading railroad. It has just confessed to having paid an agent of the state of Pennsylvania fifteen thousand dollars in each and a five thousand dollar salary to secure his silence as to what he knew of its peculiar methods, of dealing. Its capital being as elastic as its conscience, the Standard stops nowhere in using it where it sees a field of profit. It reaches out for the gas supply of our towns for the reason that they are readily susceptible of monopoly and provide a large consumption of petroleum. Reading has had the experience of the Standard management | Vargunia. of the gas works for a year, but the stockholders of the gas company have now gathered themselves together and kicked the offensive creature out. It Hung Chang, Tricon, and Licons, the dr has, we hear, wandered over to Lan. planatists who are now talking with an-Caster and undertaken our gas supply, reckless blood thirstness, the thirsateuril It gave a very poor article in Reading, war between France and China might be and will do likewise here; though it can averted. hardly do worse for us in this regard than has been done.

Mr. Payne may be unfortunate in having a son who bags a share of the Standard's stealings, and may in truth himself be a very righteous man; but he certainly stands too near this offense to shake its odor from him so as to be eligible as a Democratic leader. Mr. Payne proposes to take Mr. Pendleton's place in the Senate ; and perhaps with a in which his course on the electoral com-Payne was its ardent advocate and tells us executioner can never strengthen the best little said that in a case of the said that in a case of the said that it is a case of the said that ment but for Roscoe Conkling It was minds of the doubting.
