Simmons Liver Regulator

For Dyspepsia, Costiveness, Sick Headache, Chronic Diarrhea, Jaundice, Impurity of the Blood, Fever and Ague, Maiaria and all Diseases caused by Derangement of the Liver, Bowels and Kloneys.

SYMPTOMS OF A DISEASED LIVER.
Bad breath; Pain in the Side, sometimes the pain is feit under the Shoulder-biade, mistaken for Kheumatinn; general loss of appetite; Bowels generally costive, sometimes alternating with lax; the head is troubled with pain, is dull and heavy, with considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of leaving undone something which ought to have been done; a slight, dry cough and flushed face is sometimes an attendant, often mistaken for consumption; the patient complains of weariness and debility; nervous, essely startied; cold feet or burning, sometimes a prickly sensation of the skin exists; spirits are low and despondent, and although satisfied that exercise would be beneficial, yet one can hardly summon up fortitude to try it—in fact, distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the discusse, but cases have occurred when but lew of them exists; the Liver to have been extensively deranged. It should be used by all persons, old and young whenever any of the shows.

Persons traveling, or living in unhealthy localities, by taking a dose occasionally to keep the Liver in bealthy action, will avoid all Malaria, Bilious attacks, Ditziness, Nausea, Drowsiness, Depression of Spirits, etc. It will invigorate like a glass of wine, but is no intoxicating beverage.

If you have caten anything hard of digestion, or feel heavy after meals, or sleepless at night, take a dose and you will be relieved.

For, whatever the aliment may be a thorough ly safe purgative, alterative and tonic can hever be out of place. The remedy is harm-less and does not interiere with business or

GOOD DOG TOWSER.

Career.

A GRACEFUL TRIBUTE TO A FAITHFUL

Rev. Dr. Nevin's House Dog-His Life and Character-Animal Instinct and Intelligence - A Weil Rounded

Miss Alice Nevin in N. Y. Independent. Towser, as dog life is reckoned, was a nonogenarian, having lived the full measure of his days and somewhat over. It ure of his days and somewhat over. It is was about the close of the war that, one day, a rather doubtful looking character appeared followed by a decidedly frisky young pup, and being admitted made known his errand by saying: "I heard you folks wauted a dorg, and this is just the one to sait ye"—"Down, sir! down! down!" as the exhuberant spirits of the young does appried him heyond all bounds. young dorg carried him beyond all bounds.
"He's jist playful-like, ye see, because he can't help it, but it beats all how good natured and affectionate he is; and I tell ye he'll be the best watch dorg in all the country round when he's growed; he's good stock, he is, and no ugly tricks about

The young pup certainly seemed to merit all the praise bestowed upon him. He was a lively, frolicsome, vital looking animal, pure white, with brown head and ears, an honest, intelligent eye and good face. It was soon quite apparent that even on the shert acquaintance of half an hour he had already won the favor of the entire family; so a bargain was quickly struck, and for the sum of five dollars, eash, he was passed over to the keeping of his new masters.

Towser—for that is what we immediately dubbed him—took kindly to his country home and surroundings, and at once made himself part of the family, attaching himself warmly to every mem ber of it, and throwing himself with the most vigorous and friendly interest into everything that was going on.

He was a pointer, not entirely pure, but sufficiently so to set his nose in a beeline and make his tail stand straight out whenever he scented a partridge around, and during rabbit season he would run himself quite thin. No doubt he would have made a valuable hunting dog it he had been properly trained; but there being no hunters in our family, that part of his ducation was sadly neglected.

As he grew the true inwardness of his character developed in a most encouraging and satisfactory way. A perfectly healthy physique, an entire devotion to and interest in the family, a generous, good natured As for tramps, one of those roving as would at times make the boldest beat | minute, $3.58. a rapid retreat. I once, however, saw him entirely subdued by an old Irish beggar woman. She rang the front door bell, and Towser, who happened to be within the house, with a fearful growl made one dash through the open window; she was dread fully frightened, of course; but she stood her ground bravely, and with a coaxing, wheedling voice, exclaimed: "Och, ye blessed swate auld baste ye, what would faced look Towser instantly collapsed. wn ends when he saw fit to do so, which if he had been a man, would have carried him well through life. Like all dogs, he was fond of a piece of nice fresh meat : and he soon found out that the best place to get it was at market, and that market was on certain days of the week. So on those days he was always ready and waiting to accompany his mistress when she set forth. This, however, was soon prohibited, as dogs were not allowed at mar ket. He understood it perfectly well, but was not to be deterred. When the day came round he simply waited until he saw the horse being put to the carriage; then he made a loag detour through the gar den and fields, and when near town would suddenly appear some distance ahead trotting along in the most unconcerned and unconscious way. After this be loc curred several times, in order to put a stop to it, he was taken into his master's study on market morning, and made to lie down and stay there until they returned, when he was always given a goverous chunk of fresh beef or mutton. This reward of good behavior had such an effect that soon, of his own accord, if it was for gotten to put him in the study, he would go to the door when he saw them prepar ing to start and scratch and back to be let formative influence upon his character. In the family of his master the goal old custom of morning and evening prayers was always observed; and as the most convenient time for having the entire family together, they were had just after breakfast and tea. Somehow Towser got to coming into the room at that time ; and in order to keep him quiet, he was made to lie down in a certain place; and if he behaved himself properly his master, at the conclusion of the service, would always give him some dainty tid bit reserved from his own plate. He soon got so that he would take his place of himself, when he saw the Bible handed down, devoutly cross his front paws, and kept perfectly quiet until the word amen, when he was up and at his master's side almost before the word was finished, showing that he knew the sound of it. Occasionally, like other members of the family, he would be hate in coming in. When this happened, however, he seldom made any disturbance but, with grave and dignified demeanor, would walk quietly over to his place and

Rewards, in his case, exerted a markedly

lio down on his rug.

As a protection he slept in the Louse at night; and so acute was his hearing during his younger days, that a strange foot fall anywhere with fifty yards or more around the house was the signal for a ferocious outburst on his part. On fine evenings he iked to roam around awhile, or perhaps visit a friend; and sometimes when the hour came for retiring he had not yet returned from these jaunts. By eleven or twelve J'clock, however, never later, some of the family were sure to be aroused by a short, sharp yelp at the side door, which meant "I have come back: Let me in, if you please, as soon as possible."

If you felt inclined to punish him for his tardiness, and refused to get up, he would try the other side of the house; and and in the end he always conquered. Somebody (generally his master) would in self-defense have to come down and let him in. As the years passed by Towser lost some of that superabundant vitality which at first distinguished him, and became more portly and stout, although he con-tinued bright and active almost to the last. The family, his family as he had grown to consider them, gradually scattered—some called home by death, and others to new spheres and foreign lands, until only three of the once numer-ous household remained. At first he felt each departure sadly, especially in the case of one of his young masters, to whom he was greatly attached, and who died after a short and sudden illness. For weeks he seemed to feel that something was wrong, and searched for him in all his accustomed haunts, standing sometimes for hours at the door of a certain office in the town watching all the passers by in the hope of his coming. But after a time he appeared to reconcile himself to these changes, and to have made up his mind that they were unavoidable and in the natural order of things; so he quietly accepted the inevitable, and calmly pursued the even tenor of his life, no matter what happened. Thunder storms were the only things that seriously disturbed him. The element of the mysterious in them was too much for him; they were more than he could fathem; and at the first distant darkest room that he could find. As he grew old and venerable he acquired a certain position and standing in the community, which a long life of right living and well doing invariably gives. Dr. N's old Towser was known all through the neighborhood; and he even had the honor of having his picture appear in one of our illustrated periodicals in connection with an article on his master's life and

During the past summer it became evident that he was failing fast, though he still kept up an interest in all that was going on, and occasionally scented a rab-bit; but they were too active for him now to catch. One bright sunshiny October morning he dragged himself into the study where during his latter years he had passed many happy comfortable hours dozing upon the rug. There now he lay all day too weak and feeble to notice any one. In the evening he was taken to his kennel in the barn, and soon the good old fellow passed away, simply worn out, not by sickness but by old age. He lies under the willow tree down in the garden; and one of the pleasantest memories that will cling to us through life will be that of warm hearted, affectionate old Towser.
