SOUTHERN PROGRESS.

THE GROWTH OF THE IRON BUSINESS.

Facts that Show Wherein the South May Supplant Pennsylvania's Great Iron Trade—A Prosperous Outlook.

Atlanta Constitution.

The Courier Journal is accumulating facts that show that the business of making iron must soon be transferred from Pennsylvania and Ohio to Alabama and Tennessee. It costs about $18 to make a ton of iron in the east, and there is no way to bring the cost of a ton below $18 unless indeed, the price of labor is materially reduced. Such a reduction would be bitterly resisted, and the outlook in the old iron districts is, therefore, far from promising.

The testimony of ironmasters in the South is very clear and convincing. Mr. Fred. Sloss, the secretary of the Sloss furnace company, says that iron can be made in Birmingham at $11.91 a ton, and that this sum includes every known expense. It includes labor, clerk hire, interest on investment, interest on working capital at 8 per cent., value of the ore in the mountain before mining, wear and tear of machinery, taxes, and incidentals. Mr. Sloss is interested in making the cost of a ton appear as large as possible on paper, and he gives a price of production that affords a handsome return to both the mine owners and the furnace owners. Its safe to say that the actual cost of production does not exceed $9.50 a ton. Dr. Miller of the Eureka furnace says that iron can be made by using the Whitwell oven and proper economy at $9 a ton in Alabama. Col. A. S. Colyar says the Cowan furnace in Tennessee, with a capital of $134,000, made last year a profit $84,000. Col. Sloss of the Sloss Furnace company the largest establishment in Alabama, stated before the Senate committee that iron at $11.02 would in Alabama return a profit of 8 per cent. on all the capital invested. The managers of the Alice furnace says that the use of the Whitwell ovens has reduced the cost below $11.

Further testimony will be useless. The sum and substance of all testimony is that there is money in iron making in Alabama when the product commands $12 a ton. Now what does this mean? We have a clear advantage of 33⅓ per cent. over Cleveland and Pittsburg; and if this advantage is more than the cost of transportation to the iron centres of the East, the case of the furnaces of Ohio and Pennsylvania is indeed gloomy. We are assured that iron is now daily shipped from Birmingham to Cleveland, Ohio, at $5 a ton, thus enabling the Alabama manufacturer to undersell his Eastern rivals on their own ground. This, of course, means, in the long run, the blowing out of Eastern furnaces, and the blowing in of furnaces where iron at $12 yields handsome profits to all engaged in making it. When this movement is once fairly inaugurated, the South will prosper as it has never prospered before. It is merely a question of time.

A BIG CLAIM FOR TAXES.

A Change of Nearly $150,000 Against the Western Union.

An account has been made against the Western Union telegraph company in the auditor general's department at Harrisburg, amounting to $147,269.62. The corporation is charged with a tax of $105,663.52 on capital stock computed upon stock dividends declared during the year ended the first Monday in November, 1879, and 1881, not included in settlement made upon the report of capital stock heretofore made to the auditor general. This amount is increased to over $147,000 by charging interest at the rate of twelve per cent. a year and a penalty of ten per cent. for failure on the part of the company to make report to the auditor general. In the settlement the capital stock represented in the state for 1879 is placed at $35,068,575 and in 1881 at $31,077,410. Out of this investment it is claimed stock dividends were declared aggregating for 1879 $5,960,608 and for 1881 $19,906,015.50, which the auditor general claims is taxable under the acts of March 20, 1877, and June 7, 1879.

The Western Union telegraph company maintains that the revenue laws do not justify the imposition of the tax settled against the corporation, but, admitting that they do, the amount demanded is grossly out of proportion to the capital represented in the state. The company is credited with the ownership of 22,000 miles of wire in Pennsylvania out of a total possession of 250,000. This, it is alleged, is a great mistake, as in this computation the wires of the American Union and other telegraph companies controlled by the Western Union are included. The Western Union company claims that as these corporations have paid tax on their capital stock for 1879 and 1881 the imposition of a tax for the same article is unjust and unwarranted. The Western Union will be given an early hearing before the board of public accounts.

AN ALMOST FORGOTTEN MURDER.

After Twelve Years Elwood Loper is Arrested for Having Killed John Hoffman.

John Hoffman, a prominent citizen of Cape May, was shot in that city about 12 years ago and instantly killed by some person unknown. The crime at the time caused considerable excitement, as Mr. Hoffman was known as a quiet and peaceable citizen. Detectives were engaged to ferret out the mystery, stimulated by a reward of $1,000 for the arrest and conviction of the murderer, offered by the authorities. Every effort on their part proved futile and the search was abandoned.

A few weeks since a daughter of Mrs. Hoffman was severely whipped by her mother, when she threatened to tell something that she knew about the killing of her father. Neighbors hearing the remark informed the city officials and Detective Dukes was engaged a few days since to make an investigation. After carefully questioning the young woman, Elwood Loper, of Salem, was arrested on the charge of committing the murder. He was taken before the grand jury of Cape May county, yesterday, and after hearing evidence he was locked up in the county jail. Cape May is intensely excited over the unexpected development.

The Art of Story Telling.

London Globe.

Some people seem personally fitted for effective story telling. George Henry Lewes was one such. Those who were familiar with him have often remarked the vivacious sparkle of the eye, the peculiarly telling action of the hands, and the perfect self possession with which he would fascinate a convivial party. Anthony Trollope it was, if we are not mistaken, who once said that the very clothes he wore seemed somehow to contribute to the effect of his good stories—his velvet coat and his neat slippers, and the rest of it, all worn with that air of easy unconsciousness well calculated to enhance the points of his narrative. That unconsciousness, by the way, is a great matter in personal narrative. There are some who are prevented from ever telling a story well by their evident anxiety to do so. They appear to be as much concerned for themselves as for the success of their tale. Their own manner and choice of language and the impression they are making on their auditors, are plainly distracting their wits and diverting a great part of their power. A good story teller will always be found to be one who is himself too deep in his own enjoyment and appreciation of the tale to be at all conscious of anything pertaining to himself. He enters into the thing too fully and too entirely to be concerned with the criticisms which may be passing upon his personal appearance, or language, or manner. Anything like timidity, or nervousness, or self-consciousness is fatal to that freedom of manner which is always a principal charm of really successful tale tellers, and in all such narratives as observant travelers have to tell upon their return home. A ready flow of language is, of course, essential to success in this line. Nothing is more unpleasant than to have to listen to long narratives which seem continually on the point of breaking down for want of words, or which are told in words that continually prompt the listener to interruption and criticism which politeness nevertheless forbids. A pleasant voice, too, is a great point, though not by any means invariably indispensible. There are times, as every one must have observed, when some harsh incongruity of voice adds immensely to the effect of a story, just in the same way as the personal appearance of a narrator may greatly influence its success. Lewes was generally thought to be anything but a handsome man, and it was in great measure what some would call—did call, in fact—his very ugliness which often lent immense force to his utterances. An old or unpleasant vein may do precisely to same thing, giving, perhaps, a soupcon of acidity to what would otherwise be found flat and insipid, or a droll turn to points which would be tame and dull if told in a smooth and faultless tone.

Byron never uttered truer words than when he said, "Physicians mend or end us." But while doctors disagree, all the world has agreed that there is no remedy equal to Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup.
