

PIANO TABLE COVERS.

Embroidered Cloth PIANO COVERS

Plain and Variegated Borders

Cardinal and Turkey Red Table Cloths

Raw and Spun Silk and Fine Tapestry Table and Piano Covers

Eight Different Colorings, 5-4, 6-4, 7-4, 8-4, 8-10 and 8-10.

4-4, 6-4, 7-4, AND 8-4 SIZES.

NO 14 EAST KING STREET.

DARBY'S PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.

ERADICATES MALARIA.

For Scourge and Typhoid Fever, Diphtheria, Sallow, Elevated Sore Throat, Small Pox, Measles, and all contagious diseases. Persons with Fever has never been known to spread where the Fluid was used. Yellow Fever has been cured with it after black vomit had taken place. The worst cases of diphtheria yield to it.

Fever and sick persons relieved and best rest prevented by bathing with DARBY'S FLUID.

Impure Air made harmless and purified. For Sore Throat it is a sure cure. Contagion destroyed. For Frost-bite, Burns, Chafes, etc. It is a relief. For Hemorrhoids, Swollen Glands, etc. It is a relief. For all the latest styles in

A TRIPLE TRAGEDY.

THE GRAVEST OF THE CRIME.

A Poor Widow and Her Little Orphan Murdered by an Italian Assassin, and Their Remains Consumed With Their Host.

Elizabeth Somerford, with two little children, has for some time been living in a cabin on the land of Captain Parsons, on the eastern slope of Rich Mountain, some eight miles from Haverly, Randolph county, West Virginia. A little hut fronted the picturesque valley of the north fork of the Cheat river, and here the widow dwelt in quietness, subsisting as best she could on such provisions as she could obtain herself from the soil and the charity of her neighbors.

DEAR MR. RIDDBERGER, YOU HAVE BEEN MISINFORMED.

"No, I haven't," stoutly responded Riddberger, "because I heard you say so myself. Now what have you to say?" "Mr. Riddberger," said the attorney general, as he wrung his hands, "I shall have to say good morning."

But those days are over. Riddberger no longer thinks it funny when people call him names. He tags after Mahone, who has asked none of his stratagems, and who sits up and looks knowing, but wisely holds his tongue in the Senate.

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.

The greatest medical wonder of the world. Warranted to speedily cure Burns, Bruises, Cuts, Ulcers, Salt Rheum, Fever Sores, Chancres, Piles, Chilblains, Corns, Tetter, Chapped Hands and all skin eruptions, guaranteed to cure in every instance, or money refunded. 25 cents per box. For sale by Chas. A. Loehrer, 125-125 1/2 North Queen Street.

Would Have Been Seen Upon. Had not Bucklen's Blood Purifier been a remedy of unquestionable merit they would have been set down upon by the public as thousands of medicines have been when their worthlessness was discovered. Bucklen's Blood Purifier has received the highest praise from the sick, thus establishing their merit beyond dispute. For sale by H. B. Cochran druggist, 137 and 139 North Queen Street.

TO KNOW THAT YOU ARE PREPARED FOR THE STORM, WHEN IT DOES COME, WITH A BIG, HEAVY, STORM OVERCOAT IS A COMFORT IN ITSELF.

We have many of them left and will sell them cheap. Prices range from $8 to $30.

A. C. YATES & CO.

Ledger Building, Sixth & Chestnut Sts. PHILADELPHIA.

STRAWBRIDGE & CLOTHIER.

Market Street, Filbert Street, PHILADELPHIA.

NO 14 EAST KING STREET.

Dry Goods, Fancy Goods and Notions in Great Variety.

Silk Plushes by the Yard.

Mourning Goods a Specialty.

George Fahnestock, 14 EAST KING STREET, Lancaster, Pa.

HUMAN GUANO.

PLUMBING AND GAS FITTING.

JOHN L. ARNOLD, PLUMBING, GAS-FITTING, GAS FIXTURES, OIL FIXTURES, TIN ROOFING, SLATE ROOFING, Steam Fitters' Supplies, Patent Cold Case Heaters.

JOHN L. ARNOLD'S, Nos. 11, 13, 15 EAST ORANGE STREET, LANCASTER, PA.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS.

AMER'S, NO. 39 WEST KING STREET.

Hats, Caps, Furs.

Ladies' Seal Sarcines and Dolmans, Ladies' Fur-lined Circulars, Gents' and Ladies' Seal Caps, Silk Umbrellas, Gloves, &c., &c.

WINTER HATS, CAPS, FURS, &c.

THE LARGEST STOCK AND ASSORTMENT OF FASHIONABLE

SOLE AGENT FOR THE Knox Silk & Derby Hat.

THE ONLY Hat Manufacturer in Lancaster. The Antler and Monnet Hat a Specialty. My own manufacture. Requiring neatly and promptly done. All styles made. Fashionable.

JOHN SIDES, 425 1/2 N. Queen St. Successor to SHULTZ & BRO.

BUCHANAN'S LOYALTY AND CHARITY.

Washington correspondent of the Cleveland Leader.

Buchanan's loyalty will receive a new proof in the autograph letter which is here published for the first time. It was written just after the defeat at Bull Run to the Hon. J. C. G. Kennedy, the man who established the census bureau, and who was one of Buchanan's most intimate friends and advisers.

WHEATLAND, NEAR LANCASTER, July 24, 1861.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have received your favor of the 22d inst. and I feel the deepest sympathy for the sufferers in the disasters sustained by our troops on Wednesday last, but am not discouraged. The spirit of our people will meet the emergency with firmness and vigor, and our time is short, and in victory will wipe out the memory of defeat. I sometimes feel strongly tempted to leave my retirement, as far as to take an active and public part in assisting to rally the people of the country to battle in support of our time-honored and glorious flag; but the abuse which I received from the Republican journals in consequence of my letter to Mr. Felt, editor of the National Intelligencer, admonishes me to desist, but my opinions are freely expressed in my public occasion. I feel no apprehensions for Washington, and have great confidence in the veteran commander (General Scott). By the blessing of God my health has been almost perfectly restored, though I remain weak, but slowly. I have no objection to communicating to you the retired but agreeable spot. Please remember me very kindly to Mrs. Kennedy and the whole family, and believe me to be sincerely and respectfully your friend.

JAMES BUCHANAN.

To the Hon. J. C. G. Kennedy, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Kennedy is a delightful talker, and when I asked, "What kind of a man was Buchanan?" he replied: "The praiseworthy, kind, and apparently the coldest man you could meet. He was honest, and very patriotic, and very clear-headed. When he was elected to the presidency, and that took possession of the White House, he said to me: 'Mr. Kennedy, my duty now will engross my whole time, and I will not have much leisure to devote to private affairs, but I wish every penny of my presidential salary over my actual expenses in charity, and if you know of any worthy cases I want you to call upon me without hesitation.' I did so, and I am sure that not one dollar of his salary accompanied him when he went out of the White House."

Might He Indulged With Fruit. At once Tribune, Rep.

There were a great many points in the character of James Buchanan which might be imitated with profit by modern office holders. He never rode on a railroad train except at his personal expense, nor did he permit any of his relatives, or cabinet officers to use a government vessel for private purposes. And when the Prince of Wales visited this country in 1860, presumably the guest of the nation, Mr. Buchanan paid all the expenses of his entertainment out of his own pocket.

VIRGINIA'S SENATOR.

What a Spectacle He Presents. Correspondence N. Y. Sun.

It is perfectly delicious to see Riddberger. He is a tall, lank man, with his hair plastered down on his forehead, and he has an air of wondering delight at finding himself in the United States Senate. But he is not without the capacity for a joke. Down in Virginia they tell of a certain occasion when Riddberger was making a speech in the Virginia Legislature, and the late Raleigh T. Daniel, one of the greatest attorney generals Virginia ever produced, was in the House. Mr. Daniel was an absent minded man, and had a habit of talking to himself, causing those who overheard him to laugh outright, while he himself maintained a stately dignity, and wondered what people were laughing at. In the middle of Riddberger's speech, Mr. Daniel remarked to himself in a pause that Riddberger was the biggest fool he ever saw. The House roared but Mr. Daniel sat in calm unconsciousness of what had happened. Not long afterward he was elected attorney general, and the first time Riddberger and he met, Riddberger shook his hand warmly, congratulated him, and said: "I worked as hard for you in the canvass any man in the State, though I know you said one day when I was making a speech in the legislature that I was the biggest fool you ever saw." The attorney general assumed a shocked expression, and said: "My

BUCHANAN'S LOYALTY AND CHARITY.

Washington correspondent of the Cleveland Leader.

Buchanan's loyalty will receive a new proof in the autograph letter which is here published for the first time. It was written just after the defeat at Bull Run to the Hon. J. C. G. Kennedy, the man who established the census bureau, and who was one of Buchanan's most intimate friends and advisers.

WHEATLAND, NEAR LANCASTER, July 24, 1861.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have received your favor of the 22d inst. and I feel the deepest sympathy for the sufferers in the disasters sustained by our troops on Wednesday last, but am not discouraged. The spirit of our people will meet the emergency with firmness and vigor, and our time is short, and in victory will wipe out the memory of defeat. I sometimes feel strongly tempted to leave my retirement, as far as to take an active and public part in assisting to rally the people of the country to battle in support of our time-honored and glorious flag; but the abuse which I received from the Republican journals in consequence of my letter to Mr. Felt, editor of the National Intelligencer, admonishes me to desist, but my opinions are freely expressed in my public occasion. I feel no apprehensions for Washington, and have great confidence in the veteran commander (General Scott). By the blessing of God my health has been almost perfectly restored, though I remain weak, but slowly. I have no objection to communicating to you the retired but agreeable spot. Please remember me very kindly to Mrs. Kennedy and the whole family, and believe me to be sincerely and respectfully your friend.

JAMES BUCHANAN.

To the Hon. J. C. G. Kennedy, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Kennedy is a delightful talker, and when I asked, "What kind of a man was Buchanan?" he replied: "The praiseworthy, kind, and apparently the coldest man you could meet. He was honest, and very patriotic, and very clear-headed. When he was elected to the presidency, and that took possession of the White House, he said to me: 'Mr. Kennedy, my duty now will engross my whole time, and I will not have much leisure to devote to private affairs, but I wish every penny of my presidential salary over my actual expenses in charity, and if you know of any worthy cases I want you to call upon me without hesitation.' I did so, and I am sure that not one dollar of his salary accompanied him when he went out of the White House."

Might He Indulged With Fruit. At once Tribune, Rep.

There were a great many points in the character of James Buchanan which might be imitated with profit by modern office holders. He never rode on a railroad train except at his personal expense, nor did he permit any of his relatives, or cabinet officers to use a government vessel for private purposes. And when the Prince of Wales visited this country in 1860, presumably the guest of the nation, Mr. Buchanan paid all the expenses of his entertainment out of his own pocket.

VIRGINIA'S SENATOR.

What a Spectacle He Presents. Correspondence N. Y. Sun.

It is perfectly delicious to see Riddberger. He is a tall, lank man, with his hair plastered down on his forehead, and he has an air of wondering delight at finding himself in the United States Senate. But he is not without the capacity for a joke. Down in Virginia they tell of a certain occasion when Riddberger was making a speech in the Virginia Legislature, and the late Raleigh T. Daniel, one of the greatest attorney generals Virginia ever produced, was in the House. Mr. Daniel was an absent minded man, and had a habit of talking to himself, causing those who overheard him to laugh outright, while he himself maintained a stately dignity, and wondered what people were laughing at. In the middle of Riddberger's speech, Mr. Daniel remarked to himself in a pause that Riddberger was the biggest fool he ever saw. The House roared but Mr. Daniel sat in calm unconsciousness of what had happened. Not long afterward he was elected attorney general, and the first time Riddberger and he met, Riddberger shook his hand warmly, congratulated him, and said: "I worked as hard for you in the canvass any man in the State, though I know you said one day when I was making a speech in the legislature that I was the biggest fool you ever saw." The attorney general assumed a shocked expression, and said: "My

BUCHANAN'S LOYALTY AND CHARITY.

Washington correspondent of the Cleveland Leader.

Buchanan's loyalty will receive a new proof in the autograph letter which is here published for the first time. It was written just after the defeat at Bull Run to the Hon. J. C. G. Kennedy, the man who established the census bureau, and who was one of Buchanan's most intimate friends and advisers.

WHEATLAND, NEAR LANCASTER, July 24, 1861.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have received your favor of the 22d inst. and I feel the deepest sympathy for the sufferers in the disasters sustained by our troops on Wednesday last, but am not discouraged. The spirit of our people will meet the emergency with firmness and vigor, and our time is short, and in victory will wipe out the memory of defeat. I sometimes feel strongly tempted to leave my retirement, as far as to take an active and public part in assisting to rally the people of the country to battle in support of our time-honored and glorious flag; but the abuse which I received from the Republican journals in consequence of my letter to Mr. Felt, editor of the National Intelligencer, admonishes me to desist, but my opinions are freely expressed in my public occasion. I feel no apprehensions for Washington, and have great confidence in the veteran commander (General Scott). By the blessing of God my health has been almost perfectly restored, though I remain weak, but slowly. I have no objection to communicating to you the retired but agreeable spot. Please remember me very kindly to Mrs. Kennedy and the whole family, and believe me to be sincerely and respectfully your friend.

JAMES BUCHANAN.

To the Hon. J. C. G. Kennedy, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Kennedy is a delightful talker, and when I asked, "What kind of a man was Buchanan?" he replied: "The praiseworthy, kind, and apparently the coldest man you could meet. He was honest, and very patriotic, and very clear-headed. When he was elected to the presidency, and that took possession of the White House, he said to me: 'Mr. Kennedy, my duty now will engross my whole time, and I will not have much leisure to devote to private affairs, but I wish every penny of my presidential salary over my actual expenses in charity, and if you know of any worthy cases I want you to call upon me without hesitation.' I did so, and I am sure that not one dollar of his salary accompanied him when he went out of the White House."

Might He Indulged With Fruit. At once Tribune, Rep.

There were a great many points in the character of James Buchanan which might be imitated with profit by modern office holders. He never rode on a railroad train except at his personal expense, nor did he permit any of his relatives, or cabinet officers to use a government vessel for private purposes. And when the Prince of Wales visited this country in 1860, presumably the guest of the nation, Mr. Buchanan paid all the expenses of his entertainment out of his own pocket.

VIRGINIA'S SENATOR.

What a Spectacle He Presents. Correspondence N. Y. Sun.

It is perfectly delicious to see Riddberger. He is a tall, lank man, with his hair plastered down on his forehead, and he has an air of wondering delight at finding himself in the United States Senate. But he is not without the capacity for a joke. Down in Virginia they tell of a certain occasion when Riddberger was making a speech in the Virginia Legislature, and the late Raleigh T. Daniel, one of the greatest attorney generals Virginia ever produced, was in the House. Mr. Daniel was an absent minded man, and had a habit of talking to himself, causing those who overheard him to laugh outright, while he himself maintained a stately dignity, and wondered what people were laughing at. In the middle of Riddberger's speech, Mr. Daniel remarked to himself in a pause that Riddberger was the biggest fool he ever saw. The House roared but Mr. Daniel sat in calm unconsciousness of what had happened. Not long afterward he was elected attorney general, and the first time Riddberger and he met, Riddberger shook his hand warmly, congratulated him, and said: "I worked as hard for you in the canvass any man in the State, though I know you said one day when I was making a speech in the legislature that I was the biggest fool you ever saw." The attorney general assumed a shocked expression, and said: "My

BUCHANAN'S LOYALTY AND CHARITY.

Washington correspondent of the Cleveland Leader.

Buchanan's loyalty will receive a new proof in the autograph letter which is here published for the first time. It was written just after the defeat at Bull Run to the Hon. J. C. G. Kennedy, the man who established the census bureau, and who was one of Buchanan's most intimate friends and advisers.

WHEATLAND, NEAR LANCASTER, July 24, 1861.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have received your favor of the 22d inst. and I feel the deepest sympathy for the sufferers in the disasters sustained by our troops on Wednesday last, but am not discouraged. The spirit of our people will meet the emergency with firmness and vigor, and our time is short, and in victory will wipe out the memory of defeat. I sometimes feel strongly tempted to leave my retirement, as far as to take an active and public part in assisting to rally the people of the country to battle in support of our time-honored and glorious flag; but the abuse which I received from the Republican journals in consequence of my letter to Mr. Felt, editor of the National Intelligencer, admonishes me to desist, but my opinions are freely expressed in my public occasion. I feel no apprehensions for Washington, and have great confidence in the veteran commander (General Scott). By the blessing of God my health has been almost perfectly restored, though I remain weak, but slowly. I have no objection to communicating to you the retired but agreeable spot. Please remember me very kindly to Mrs. Kennedy and the whole family, and believe me to be sincerely and respectfully your friend.

JAMES BUCHANAN.

To the Hon. J. C. G. Kennedy, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Kennedy is a delightful talker, and when I asked, "What kind of a man was Buchanan?" he replied: "The praiseworthy, kind, and apparently the coldest man you could meet. He was honest, and very patriotic, and very clear-headed. When he was elected to the presidency, and that took possession of the White House, he said to me: 'Mr. Kennedy, my duty now will engross my whole time, and I will not have much leisure to devote to private affairs, but I wish every penny of my presidential salary over my actual expenses in charity, and if you know of any worthy cases I want you to call upon me without hesitation.' I did so, and I am sure that not one dollar of his salary accompanied him when he went out of the White House."

Might He Indulged With Fruit. At once Tribune, Rep.

There were a great many points in the character of James Buchanan which might be imitated with profit by modern office holders. He never rode on a railroad train except at his personal expense, nor did he permit any of his relatives, or cabinet officers to use a government vessel for private purposes. And when the Prince of Wales visited this country in 1860, presumably the guest of the nation, Mr. Buchanan paid all the expenses of his entertainment out of his own pocket.

VIRGINIA'S SENATOR.

What a Spectacle He Presents. Correspondence N. Y. Sun.

It is perfectly delicious to see Riddberger. He is a tall, lank man, with his hair plastered down on his forehead, and he has an air of wondering delight at finding himself in the United States Senate. But he is not without the capacity for a joke. Down in Virginia they tell of a certain occasion when Riddberger was making a speech in the Virginia Legislature, and the late Raleigh T. Daniel, one of the greatest attorney generals Virginia ever produced, was in the House. Mr. Daniel was an absent minded man, and had a habit of talking to himself, causing those who overheard him to laugh outright, while he himself maintained a stately dignity, and wondered what people were laughing at. In the middle of Riddberger's speech, Mr. Daniel remarked to himself in a pause that Riddberger was the biggest fool he ever saw. The House roared but Mr. Daniel sat in calm unconsciousness of what had happened. Not long afterward he was elected attorney general, and the first time Riddberger and he met, Riddberger shook his hand warmly, congratulated him, and said: "I worked as hard for you in the canvass any man in the State, though I know you said one day when I was making a speech in the legislature that I was the biggest fool you ever saw." The attorney general assumed a shocked expression, and said: "My

WALL PAPERS.

The styles are beautiful and we have them in elegant assortment, from the common brown to the most considered gilt, one, two and three band designs. Decorations for ceilings in elegant designs, centre pieces to match.

Dado Window Shades

Are becoming more popular every season. We can show you fifty different styles, in the prevailing colors. Plain shades for shades in all widths, styles, ornaments, etc.

CREAM AND WHITE LACE CURTAINS, BRIDGES, FLOW SHAMS, TIES, AND LAMBRQUINS, CURTAIN PULS, CORNICES, MIRRORS, &c.

PHARES W. FRY, 57 NORTH QUEEN ST.

WE HAVE A FEW BRUSH AND COMB SETS, which we will sell at a sacrifice to close them out.

NO REASONABLE OFFER REFUSED!

Also, a few Old Cases which we do not wish to carry over.

POSITIVE BARGAINS AT

Thos. B. Bechtold's Drug Store, No. 40 WEST ORANGE STREET, corner of Chestnut.

SHULTZ'S ONLY HAT STORE, No. 144.

NORTH QUEEN STREET, LANCASTER, PA.

BAUMGARDNERS & JEFFERIES, COAL DEALERS.

OFFICES—No. 21 North Queen Street, and No. 54 North Prince Street, near Reading.

BAUMGARDNERS & JEFFERIES, COAL DEALERS.

OFFICES—No. 21 North Queen Street, and No. 54 North Prince Street, near Reading.

MANURE AND COAL.

New York and Philadelphia Horse Manure by the car load at reduced prices. All the best grades of coal.

Both for Family and Steam purposes. CEMENT by the barrel, HAY and STRAW by the ton or bale.

YARD—315 Harrisburg Pike. GENERAL OFFICE—305 East Chestnut Street. KAUFFMAN, Keller & Co. 404-133

M. V. B. COHO, 350 NORTH BATES ST., LANCASTER, Pa.

Wholesale and Retail Dealers in LUMBER AND COAL.

Connection with the Telephone Exchange.

Yard and Office—No. 330 NORTH WATER STREET.

BUCHANAN'S LOYALTY AND CHARITY.

Washington correspondent of the Cleveland Leader.

Buchanan's loyalty will receive a new proof in the autograph letter which is here published for the first time. It was written just after the defeat at Bull Run to the Hon. J. C. G. Kennedy, the man who established the census bureau, and who was one of Buchanan's most intimate friends and advisers.

WHEATLAND, NEAR LANCASTER, July 24, 1861.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have received your favor of the 22d inst. and I feel the deepest sympathy for the sufferers in the disasters sustained by our troops on Wednesday last, but am not discouraged. The spirit of our people will meet the emergency with firmness and vigor, and our time is short, and in victory will wipe out the memory of defeat. I sometimes feel strongly tempted to leave my retirement, as far as to take an active and public part in assisting to rally the people of the country to battle in support of our time-honored and glorious flag; but the abuse which I received from the Republican journals in consequence of my letter to Mr. Felt, editor of the National Intelligencer, admonishes me to desist, but my opinions are freely expressed in my public occasion. I feel no apprehensions for Washington, and have great confidence in the veteran commander (General Scott). By the blessing of God my health has been almost perfectly restored, though I remain weak, but slowly. I have no objection to communicating to you the retired but agreeable spot. Please remember me very kindly to Mrs. Kennedy and the whole family, and believe me to be sincerely and respectfully your friend.

JAMES BUCHANAN.

To the Hon. J. C. G. Kennedy, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Kennedy is a delightful talker, and when I asked, "What kind of a man was Buchanan?" he replied: "The praiseworthy, kind, and apparently the coldest man you could meet. He was honest, and very patriotic, and very clear-headed. When he was elected to the presidency, and that took possession of the White House, he said to me: 'Mr. Kennedy, my duty now will engross my whole time, and I will not have much leisure to devote to private affairs, but I wish every penny of my presidential salary over my actual expenses in charity, and if you know of any worthy cases I want you to call upon me without hesitation.' I did so, and I am sure that not one dollar of his salary accompanied him when he went out of the White House."

Might He Indulged With Fruit. At once Tribune, Rep.

There were a great many points in the character of James Buchanan which might be imitated with profit by modern office holders. He never rode on a railroad train except at his personal expense, nor did he permit any of his relatives, or cabinet officers to use a government vessel for private purposes. And when the Prince of Wales visited this country in 1860, presumably the guest of the nation, Mr. Buchanan paid all the expenses of his entertainment out of his own pocket.

VIRGINIA'S SENATOR.

What a Spectacle He Presents. Correspondence N. Y. Sun.

It is perfectly delicious to see Riddberger. He is a tall, lank man, with his hair plastered down on his forehead, and he has an air of wondering delight at finding himself in the United States Senate. But he is not without the capacity for a joke. Down in Virginia they tell of a certain occasion when Riddberger was making a speech in the Virginia Legislature, and the late Raleigh T. Daniel, one of the greatest attorney generals Virginia ever produced, was in the House. Mr. Daniel was an absent minded man, and had a habit of talking to himself, causing those who overheard him to laugh outright, while he himself maintained a stately dignity, and wondered what people were laughing at. In the middle of Riddberger's speech, Mr. Daniel remarked to himself in a pause that Riddberger was the biggest fool he ever saw. The House roared but Mr. Daniel sat in calm unconsciousness of what had happened. Not long afterward he was elected attorney general, and the first time Riddberger and he met, Riddberger shook his hand warmly, congratulated him, and said: "I worked as hard for you in the canvass any man in the State, though I know you said one day when I was making a speech in the legislature that I was the biggest fool you ever saw." The attorney general assumed a shocked expression, and said: "My

BUCHANAN'S LOYALTY AND CHARITY.

Washington correspondent of the Cleveland Leader.

Buchanan's loyalty will receive a new proof in the autograph letter which is here published for the first time. It was written just after the defeat at Bull Run to the Hon. J. C. G. Kennedy, the man who established the census bureau, and who was one of Buchanan's most intimate friends and advisers.

WHEATLAND, NEAR LANCASTER, July 24, 1861.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have received your favor of the 22d inst. and I feel the deepest sympathy for the sufferers in the disasters sustained by our troops on Wednesday last, but am not discouraged. The spirit of our people will meet the emergency with firmness and vigor, and our time is short, and in victory will wipe out the memory of defeat. I sometimes feel strongly tempted to leave my retirement, as far as to take an active and public part in assisting to rally the people of the country to battle in support of our time-honored and glorious flag; but the abuse which I received from the Republican journals in consequence of my letter to Mr. Felt, editor of the National Intelligencer, admonishes me to desist, but my opinions are freely expressed in my public occasion. I feel no apprehensions for Washington, and have great confidence in the veteran commander (General Scott). By the blessing of God my health has been almost perfectly restored, though I remain weak, but slowly. I have no objection to communicating to you the retired but agreeable spot. Please remember me very kindly to Mrs. Kennedy and the whole family, and believe me to be sincerely and respectfully your friend.

JAMES BUCHANAN.

To the Hon. J. C. G. Kennedy, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Kennedy is a delightful talker, and when I asked, "What kind of a man was Buchanan?" he replied: "The praiseworthy, kind, and apparently the coldest man you could meet. He was honest, and very patriotic, and very clear-headed. When he was elected to the presidency, and that took possession of the White House, he said to me: 'Mr. Kennedy, my duty now will engross my whole time, and I will not have much leisure to devote to private affairs, but I wish every penny of my presidential salary over my actual expenses in charity, and if you know of any worthy cases I want you to call upon me without hesitation.' I did so, and I am sure that not one dollar of his salary accompanied him when he went out of the White House."

Might He Indulged With Fruit. At once Tribune, Rep.

There were a great many points in the character of James Buchanan which might be imitated with profit by modern office holders. He never rode on a railroad train except at his personal expense, nor did he permit any of his relatives, or cabinet officers to use a government vessel for private purposes. And when the Prince of Wales visited this country in 1860, presumably the guest of the nation, Mr. Buchanan paid all the expenses of his entertainment out of his own pocket.

VIRGINIA'S SENATOR.

What a Spectacle He Presents. Correspondence N. Y. Sun.

It is perfectly delicious to see Riddberger. He is a tall, lank man, with his hair plastered down on his forehead, and he has an air of wondering delight at finding himself in the United States Senate. But he is not without the capacity for a joke. Down in Virginia they tell of a certain occasion when Riddberger was making a speech in the Virginia Legislature, and the late Raleigh T. Daniel, one of the greatest attorney generals Virginia ever produced, was in the House. Mr. Daniel was an absent minded man, and had a habit of talking to himself, causing those who overheard him to laugh outright, while he himself maintained a stately dignity, and wondered what people were laughing at. In the middle of Riddberger's speech, Mr. Daniel remarked to himself in a pause that Riddberger was the biggest fool he ever saw. The House roared but Mr. Daniel sat in calm unconsciousness of what had happened. Not long afterward he was elected attorney general, and the first time Riddberger and he met, Riddberger shook his hand warmly, congratulated him, and said: "I worked as hard for you in the canvass any man in the State, though I know you said one day when I was making a speech in the legislature that I was the biggest fool you ever saw." The attorney general assumed a shocked expression, and said: "My

BUCHANAN'S LOYALTY AND CHARITY.

Washington correspondent of the Cleveland Leader.

Buchanan's loyalty will receive a new proof in the autograph letter which is here published for the first time. It was written just after the defeat at Bull Run to the Hon. J. C. G. Kennedy, the man who established the census bureau, and who was one of Buchanan's most intimate friends and advisers.

WHEATLAND, NEAR LANCASTER, July 24, 1861.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have received your favor of the 22d inst. and I feel the deepest sympathy for the sufferers in the disasters sustained by our troops on Wednesday last, but am not discouraged. The spirit of our people will meet the emergency with firmness and vigor, and our time is short, and in victory will wipe out the memory of defeat. I sometimes feel strongly tempted to leave my retirement, as far as to take an active and public part in assisting to rally the people of the country to battle in support of our time-honored and glorious flag; but the abuse which I received from the Republican journals in consequence of my letter to Mr. Felt, editor of the National Intelligencer, admonishes me to desist, but my opinions are freely expressed in my public occasion. I feel no apprehensions for Washington, and have great confidence in the veteran commander (General Scott). By the blessing of God my health has been almost perfectly restored, though I remain weak, but slowly. I have no objection to communicating to you the retired but agreeable spot. Please remember me very kindly to Mrs. Kennedy and the whole family, and believe me to be sincerely and respectfully your friend.

JAMES BUCHANAN.

To the Hon. J. C. G. Kennedy, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Kennedy is a delightful talker, and when I asked, "What kind of a man was Buchanan?" he replied: "The praiseworthy, kind, and apparently the coldest man you could meet. He was honest, and very patriotic, and very clear-headed. When he was elected to the presidency, and that took possession of the White House, he said to me: 'Mr. Kennedy, my duty now will engross my whole time, and I will not have much leisure to devote to private affairs, but I wish every penny of my presidential salary over my actual expenses in charity, and if you know of any worthy cases I want you to call upon me without hesitation.' I did so, and I am sure that not one dollar of his salary accompanied him when he went out of the White House."

Might He Indulged With Fruit. At once Tribune, Rep.

There were a great many points in the character of James Buchanan which might be imitated with profit by modern office holders. He never rode on a railroad train except at his personal expense, nor did he permit any of his relatives, or cabinet officers to use a government vessel for private purposes. And when the Prince of Wales visited this country in 1860, presumably the guest of the nation, Mr. Buchanan paid all the expenses of his entertainment out of his own pocket.

VIRGINIA'S SENATOR.

What a Spectacle He Presents. Correspondence N. Y. Sun.

It is perfectly delicious to see Riddberger. He is a tall, lank man, with his hair plastered down on his forehead, and he has an air of wondering delight at finding himself in the United States Senate. But he is not without the capacity for a joke. Down in Virginia they tell of a certain occasion when Riddberger was making a speech in the Virginia Legislature, and the late Raleigh T. Daniel, one of the greatest attorney generals Virginia ever produced, was in the House. Mr. Daniel was an absent minded man, and had a habit of talking to himself, causing those who overheard him to laugh outright, while he himself maintained a stately dignity, and wondered what people were laughing at. In the middle of Riddberger's speech, Mr. Daniel remarked to himself in a pause that Riddberger was the biggest fool he ever saw. The House roared but Mr. Daniel sat in calm unconsciousness of what had happened. Not long afterward he was elected attorney general, and the first time Riddberger and he met, Riddberger shook his hand warmly, congratulated him, and said: "I worked as hard for you in the canvass any man in the State, though I know you said one day when I was making a speech in the legislature that I was the biggest fool you ever saw." The attorney general assumed a shocked expression, and said: "My

BUCHANAN'S LOYALTY AND CHARITY.

Washington correspondent of the Cleveland Leader.

Buchanan's loyalty will receive a new proof in the autograph letter which is here published for the first time. It was written just after the defeat at Bull Run to the Hon. J. C. G. Kennedy, the man who established the census bureau, and who was one of Buchanan's most intimate friends and advisers.

WHEATLAND, NEAR LANCASTER, July 24, 1861.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have received your favor of the 22d inst. and I feel the deepest sympathy for the sufferers in the disasters sustained by our troops on Wednesday last, but am not discouraged. The spirit of our people will meet the emergency with firmness and vigor, and our time is short, and in victory will wipe out the memory of defeat. I sometimes feel strongly tempted to leave my retirement, as far as to take an active and public part in assisting to rally the people of the country to battle in support of our time-honored and glorious flag; but the abuse which I received from the Republican journals in consequence of my letter to Mr. Felt, editor of the National Intelligencer, admonishes me to desist, but my opinions are freely expressed in my public occasion. I feel no apprehensions for Washington, and have great confidence in the veteran commander (General Scott). By the blessing of God my health has been almost perfectly restored, though I remain weak, but slowly. I have no objection to communicating to you the retired but agreeable spot. Please remember me very kindly to Mrs. Kennedy and the whole family, and believe me to be sincerely and respectfully your friend.

JAMES BUCHANAN.

To the Hon. J. C. G. Kennedy, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Kennedy is a delightful talker, and when I asked, "What kind of a man was Buchanan?" he replied: "The praiseworthy, kind, and apparently the coldest man you could meet. He was honest, and very patriotic, and very clear-headed. When he was elected to the presidency, and that took possession of the White House, he said to me: 'Mr. Kennedy, my duty now will engross my whole time, and I will not have much leisure to devote to private affairs, but I wish every penny of my presidential salary over my actual expenses in charity, and if you know of any worthy cases I want you to call upon me without hesitation.' I did so, and I am sure that not one dollar of his salary accompanied him when he went out of the White House."

Might He Indulged With Fruit. At once Tribune, Rep.

There were a great many points in the character of James Buchanan which might be imitated with profit by modern office holders. He never rode on a railroad train except at his personal expense, nor did he permit any of his relatives, or cabinet officers to use a government vessel for private purposes. And when the Prince of Wales visited this country in 1860, presumably the guest of the nation, Mr. Buchanan paid all the expenses of his entertainment out of his own pocket.

VIRGINIA'S SENATOR.

What a Spectacle He Presents. Correspondence N. Y. Sun.

It is perfectly delicious to see Riddberger. He is a tall, lank man, with his hair plastered down on his forehead, and he has an air of wondering delight at finding himself in the United States Senate. But he is not without the capacity for a joke. Down in Virginia they tell of a certain occasion when Riddberger was making a speech in the Virginia Legislature, and the late Raleigh T. Daniel, one of the greatest attorney generals Virginia ever produced, was in the House. Mr. Daniel was an absent minded man, and had a habit of talking to himself, causing those who overheard him to laugh outright, while he himself maintained a stately dignity, and wondered what people were laughing at. In the middle of Riddberger's speech, Mr. Daniel remarked to himself in a pause that Riddberger was the biggest fool he ever saw. The House roared but Mr. Daniel sat in calm unconsciousness of what had happened. Not long afterward he was elected attorney general, and the first time Riddberger and he met, Riddberger shook his hand warmly, congratulated him, and said: "I worked as hard for you in the canvass any man in the State, though I know you said one day when I was making a speech in the legislature that I was the biggest fool you ever saw." The attorney general assumed a shocked expression, and said: "My