On the contrary, during the last two or three years the number of readers of cir culating library novels has been steadily and largely decreasing. This, he says, is probably to be accounted for mainly by the excess of fiction in other directions. Novel readers who used to resort to the libraries now get their full supply in the daily weekly, and monthly journals. It is said that for every novel printed and published probably ten are written and rejected. Thus, then, one has to contemplate over 3,000 novels being written in one year, of which 350 see the light, and of these only about 120 pay the expenses of production, the whole of the remaining mass of writing
