Home Comfort.
After a Heavy Ride a Country Physician Tells What He Thinks of some People.
"I wish to gracious some people would learn when they need a doctor and when they don't," exclaimed Doctor F., as he entered his house in a cozy little village in the interior of the state of New York, after a tedious night ride of many miles. "I have been down among the hills, and I have seen the messenger and he was very sick and not likely to live until morning, unless he had immediate help; and found him suffering from a rather sharp attack of colic, which his family might have relieved in ten minutes, if they had a grain of sense and two or three simple remedies in the house. But no; they must remain ignorant as pigs, and when the least ache or pain takes them, send for a doctor, whether they ever pay him or not."

AVENGING A WRONG.

A WIFE'S TREATMENT OF HER LORD.

Deceived by Her Husband a Baltimore Woman Registers an Oath Never to Speak to Him Again.
Baltimore, Md., Feb. 8, 1884.
On Madison avenue, Baltimore, there are living a married couple who for the past five years, have existed surrounded by the most intense atmosphere of mental gloom. Although the husband is actively engaged in business, making money thereby rapidly, and possessing a companionable and a social character, at all times the wife is a repressed, maturely beautiful woman, with the usual hereditary trait of conversational ability so common to her sex developed in her case to an extraordinary degree. Although three attractive and lovely children complete the domestic roll call of this particular family, yet for the past five years not one solitary word has been exchanged between this husband and wife. They each daily partake at the same table and at the same hour of three solemn, silent meals, as if they were concerned-meals. The children, of course, chatter some, but the father and mother sit dumb like monumental statues in a snow storm. Each night they occupy the same room, but not one word is exchanged between them.

Years ago the lady who now successfully enacts the role of the "Silent Wife" was a beautiful society belle of Baltimore. Among her suitors at that time were two persistent young men, both armed with culture, education, wealth and energy. One of these she loved and ultimately formally accepted him, and they became publicly betrothed. The other, as may be safely surmised, then took a back seat in the arena of life for the time being; but he did not mourn in obscurity and despair for a very lengthy period. In an hour of adversity, when the arts he succeeded in convincing the lady that the gentleman to whom she was engaged was a perfidious libertine and had betrayed a certain young lady with whom she was casually acquainted by a letter. When the lady returned to her betrothed, she found the accused returned an indignant reply, and the result was an open rupture. The rejected suitor now had the opportunity which he had sought for, and again laid a most vigorous siege to the citadel of the lady's heart. In a moment of weakness, she yielded to his advances, and the result was a marriage. Five years after the marriage this lady, accompanied by her husband, went to a fancy dress ball given in honor of a charitable organization in which she was deeply interested. During all these years of her supposed happy married life she had never seen nor exchanged words in any way with the gentleman to whom she had once been betrothed, and who in true reality, was the only one who loved her.

During the height of the festivities she was invited to dance by what seemingly was a stranger. Her husband at the time was temporarily absent. She, feeling strangely and irresistibly attracted toward the masked gentleman who asked her for the honor of a waltz, although he was apparently a stranger, reluctantly consented. During the dance she became fully conscious of the most singular and reality, was the only one who loved her.
